Inglis on fourth trip to Iraq

U.S. Rep. Bob Inglis will make his fourth trip to Iraq, traveling with a bipartisan group of four other U.S. representatives this weekend. The group will also make stops in Kuwait, Israel and the Czech Republic.

The five-day trip will give lawmakers the opportunity to examine progress on political, military and reconstruction efforts in Iraq.

"The security situation in Iraq has changed significantly since I was last there in April of 2007," Inglis said in a statement. "I'm looking forward to seeing that progress and to urging progress on reconciliation goals."

The group will make a brief stop in Kuwait, discuss regional security and humanitarian efforts with officials in Israel, and review missile defense, anti-terrorist financing and anti-money laundering efforts in the Czech Republic.
