THE TRIBAL LAW AND ORDER ACT OF 2009

OCTOBER 29, 2009.—Ordered to be printed

Mr. DORGAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following

R E P O R T

[To accompany S. 797]

[Including cost estimate of the Congressional Budget Office]

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 797), to amend the Indian Law Enforcement Reform Act, the Indian Tribal Justice Act, the Indian Tribal Justice Technical and Legal Assistance Act of 2000, and the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 to improve the prosecution of, and response to, crimes in Indian country, and for other purposes, having considered the same, reports favorably thereon with an amendment in the nature of a substitute and recommends that the bill (as amended) do pass.

I. PURPOSE

The criminal justice system on Indian lands consists of a complex and often overlapping matrix of federal, tribal, and in certain circumstances, state jurisdiction. The complexity of this system has contributed to a crisis of violent crime on many Indian reservations¹ that has persisted for decades. Federal reports have consistently found that the divided system of justice in place on Indian reservations lacks coordination, accountability, and adequate and consistent funding. These shortfalls, the reports find, serve to foster reservation violence and disrupt the peace and public safety of tribal communities.

For example, in 1975, the Ford Administration in its Report of the Task Force on Indian Matters acknowledged that “[l]aw enforcement on Indian reservations is in serious trouble.”² Regarding the system of justice, the Report found that the “chaotic” state of criminal jurisdiction was one “source of many of the law enforcement problems Indians face.”³ With regard to resources, the Report found that “[m]ost Indian reservations receive totally inadequate police services given their size and extraordinary high rate of crime.”⁴

In 1997, the Clinton Administration’s Report of the Executive Committee for Indian Country Law Enforcement Improvements again acknowledged that “[t]here is a public safety crisis in Indian Country.”⁵ The Executive Committee concluded that a substantial infusion of resources into Indian Country law enforcement was essential to addressing the crisis, and that the delivery of law enforcement services must be consolidated and improved.⁶

More than a decade after this latest report little has changed in either the makeup of the system of justice in place on Indian lands or the consistency of funding for the system.⁷ Violent crime rates in Indian country are more than twice the national average, with violent crime rates exceeding 20 times the national average on some reservations. There is an epidemic of domestic and sexual violence in Indian country. Federal reports indicate that 34% of American Indian and Alaska Native women will be raped in their lifetimes, and 39% will suffer domestic violence. American Indian and Alaska Native youth experience 50% higher rates of child abuse compared to non-native youth.⁸ Federal Bureau of Investigation agents and U.S. Attorneys have seen a proliferation of gang activity in Indian country.⁹ The police presence in Indian country continues to lag far behind the rest of the nation, with an approximate ⁶The President’s FY 1999 Budget included, for the first time, direct funding for programs to improve tribal justice systems administered by the Department of Justice (DOJ). Programs included the Community Oriented Policing Services-Tribal Resources Grant Program, the Tribal Courts Assistance Project, the Tribal Jails Construction Program, and the Tribal Youth Program. Department of Justice/Department of Interior Tribal Justice Initiatives: Hearing Before the Senate Comm. on Indian Affairs, 105th Cong., at 58-62 (June 3, 1998) (statement of United States Attorney General Janet Reno). Congress provided $84 million in funding for these DOJ programs in FY 1999.

⁷Funding for tribal justice programs at the Department of Justice reached a high of $91.5 million in FY 2000, and steadily declined over the next decade, reaching a low of $42 million in FY 2006.

However, Native gangs are now involved in more violent offenses like sexual assault, gang rapes, home invasions, drive-by shootings, beatings and elder abuse.”).

According to information the BIA provided to Committee staff, the Wind River Indian Reservation experienced 37 assaults by gang members using weapons such as guns, knives, or brass knuckles. In one 2007 incident, a gang member driving a van ran over an opposing gang member and later ran down a BIA police officer who was responding to the incident.

40% unmet need in staffing for police officers on Indian lands. The federal response to reservation crime remains fragmented and fails to meet the justice needs of tribal communities.

The Tribal Law and Order Act of 2009 will improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the justice system on Indian lands. The bill will increase the federal response to and accountability for reservation crime, encourage greater cooperation between tribal, federal, and state law enforcement agencies that have an obligation to maintain public safety on Indian lands, provide tribal justice officials with additional tools to better combat violent crime, reauthorize and improve federal programs that strengthen tribal justice systems, establish consistent data collection of Indian country crimes, and foster information sharing between tribal, state, and federal law enforcement agencies.¹⁰

II. THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE SYSTEM ON INDIAN LANDS

The criminal justice system in place on Indian lands was established through a piecemeal series of federal laws and United States Supreme Court decisions enacted and handed down over the past 120 plus years. These laws and court decisions limit tribal government authority to combat reservation crime, and place significant responsibility to investigate and prosecute reservation crimes in the Federal Government and some state governments.¹¹ As a result, tribal governments have no criminal jurisdiction over reservation crimes committed by non-Indians,¹² and tribal court penal authority over Indians is limited to no more than one year imprisonment for any one offense.¹³ The system thus forces tribal communities to rely on federal officials to investigate and prosecute all reservation crimes committed by non-Indians against Indian victims and most serious crimes committed by Indians.

In addition, these laws and court rulings have established a jurisdictional maze that requires police officers and courts to answer a series of questions before making decisions to arrest a suspect, investigate a crime, or bring a defendant to trial. Some common questions include:

- Did the crime occur in Indian country?
- Is the suspect or defendant Indian or non-Indian?
- Is the victim Indian or non-Indian?
- What type of crime is involved?

While these questions seem simple on the surface, the definition of the terms alone involves complex questions of fact and law. The

Traditionally, Indian tribes provided for the public safety and security of their communities through customary enforcement mechanisms, such as the leadership of cacique and the guardianship of warrior societies. Penalties for violations of tribal laws ranged from ridicule to banishment or execution. Fines in the form of compensation to the victim were the most common form of traditional punishment imposed.

¹² Oliphant v. Suquamish, 435 U.S. 191 (1978) (finding that tribal courts were implicitly divested of jurisdiction over reservation crimes committed by non-Indians).

former U.S. Attorney from Colorado explained these difficulties in testimony before the Committee:

In some investigations, it can be difficult or even impossible to determine at the crime scene whether the victim, the suspect, or both is an “Indian” or a “non-Indian” for purposes of deciding which jurisdiction—federal and/or tribal, or state—has responsibility and which criminal laws apply. In those crucial first hours of an investigation, this can raise a fundamental question—which agency is really in charge? This is the antithesis of effective government.¹⁴

- In a separate hearing, the former United States Attorney from Minnesota made the following statement: “One hundred and twenty-plus years of court decisions and stop-gap legislation have created a jurisdictional mess, which means that law enforcement is difficult, delay is normal and respect for law enforcement and judicial process is low. The losers are the people of Indian Country.”¹⁵

- The result of these federal laws and Court decisions is that along with the authority that the United States imposed over Indian tribes, it incurred significant legal and moral obligations to provide for public safety on Indian lands.¹⁶

III. DEVELOPMENT OF THE LEGISLATION

The Committee held twelve hearings during the 110th and 111th Congresses that focused on various aspects of the criminal justice system in place on Indian lands. The hearings confirmed that a longstanding and life threatening public safety crisis exists in many Indian communities.

On November 7, 2007, Senator Dorgan released a concept paper, based on testimony and comments received, recommending changes to improve the criminal justice system in place on Indian lands. On July 23, 2008, Senator Dorgan, with 12 co-sponsors including Senators Baucus, Biden, Bingaman, Cantwell, Domenici, Johnson, Kyl, Lieberman, Murkowski, Smith, Tester, and Thune, introduced S. 3320, the Tribal Law and Order Act of 2008. The bill was referred to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs and hearings were held on the bill, but the Committee did not report out the bill during the 110th Congress.

IV. COMMITTEE ACTION AND RECOMMENDATION

In the 111th Congress, Senator Dorgan introduced S. 797, the Tribal Law and Order Act of 2009 on April 2, 2009. The legislation

See also, United States v. Kagama, 118 U.S. 375, 384 (1886) (“[D]ue to the course of dealing of the federal government with [the Tribes], and the treaties in which it has been promised, there arises the duty of protection, and with it the power.”).

has 18 co-sponsors including Senators Barrasso, Baucus, Bingaman, Begich, Bennet (CO), Boxer, Cantwell, Crapo, Johnson, Kyl, Lieberman, Merkley, Murkowski, Stabenow, Tester, Thune, Udall (NM), and Wyden. The bill was referred to the Committee, which held a hearing on S. 797 on June 25, 2009.

Co-sponsoring Members, the Administration, and other interested parties provided additional views on the bill as introduced. The Committee developed a substitute amendment to S. 797 that made a number of changes in response to comments offered by the Department of Justice (DOJ), tribal leaders, the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, and other interested parties. The key changes made in the substitute amendment include the following:

- Section 102—Disposition Reports. The substitute amendment reflects a number of changes to Section 102 to address technical and substantive comments offered by DOJ. The provision retains the requirements that federal officials maintain and publish aggregate data on declinations, and coordinate with tribal justice officials on the use of evidence.

- Section 104—Native American Issues Coordinator. The substitute amendment reflects DOJ's request to establish the position of a "Native American Issues Coordinator" within the Executive Office of the U.S. Attorneys, instead of an "Office of Indian Country Crime" within the Criminal Division as was proposed in the bill as introduced.

- Section 304—Bureau of Prisons Pilot Project. The substitute amendment reflects DOJ's request to establish a pilot project to house offenders convicted in tribal court of major crimes at appropriate Bureau of Prisons facilities. The substitute proposes a 4-year pilot project. The bill as introduced included no end date for this program.

- Section 304—Law Training for Tribal Public Defenders and Judges. The substitute amendment clarifies that tribal governments must bear the costs of attorneys for indigent defendants who are subject to more than one year imprisonment for any one offense in tribal court. It also clarifies that both attorneys and tribal court judges must receive sufficient legal training to be eligible to provide defense services or preside over such cases.

- Section 304—Tribal Court Sentencing for Multiple Crimes. The substitute clarifies that tribal courts can charge suspects for multiple crimes and sentence offenders to consecutive sentences when at least one element of a crime differs from that of another crime.

The Committee received letters in support of the bill from a number of Indian tribes and organizations, including the National Congress of American Indians, the American Bar Association, Amnesty International U.S.A., the Friends Committee on National Legislation, the Family Violence Prevention Fund, Mending the Sacred Hoop, the New York State Coalition Against Sexual Assault, Strong Hearted Native Women's Coalition, Qualla Women's Justice Alliance, and other organizations.

In an open business meeting on September 10, 2009, and with a quorum present, the Committee, by unanimous voice vote approved S. 797 with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. Four amendments were offered to the amendment in the nature of a substitute. One amendment was offered by Senator Franken to require a report on sex trafficking of Native women. Two amendments were offered by Senator Murkowski to address concerns relating specifically to Alaska Native Villages. A third amendment was offered by Senator Murkowski to require a report on the capacity of the Indian Health Service and tribal health facilities to acquire forensic evidence from victims of sexual assault and domestic violence. All four amendments were accepted by voice vote. By unanimous voice vote, the Committee then approved the amendment in the nature of a substitute as amended.

V. DISCUSSION AND KEY PROVISIONS

S. 797 takes a comprehensive approach to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the justice system on Indian lands to better meet the goal of combating and preventing reservation crime. The bill will increase federal response to and accountability for reservation crime, encourage greater cooperation between tribal, federal, and state law enforcement agencies, provide tribal justice officials with additional tools to combat crime locally, reauthorize and improve federal programs designed to strengthen tribal justice systems, establish and foster improved Indian country criminal data collection and criminal history information sharing, and require additional coordination and training among federal and tribal officials to enhance the investigation and prosecution of crimes of domestic and sexual violence in Indian country.

Police and corrections officer recruitment and retention

The lack of police presence in Indian country is a major contributing factor to reservation crime. Less than 3,000 Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) and tribal law enforcement officers patrol more than 56 million acres of Indian lands in 35 states.¹⁷ This total amounts to an approximate unmet staffing need of 40% when compared to similar rural communities nationwide.¹⁸ The unmet staffing need is far greater on some reservations.¹⁹

The lack of resources is an unfortunate theme on many Indian reservations. The BIA FY 2008 Crime Report indicated that there were at least 30 Indian reservations where the violent crime rate exceeded the national average and additional officers were needed. For example, the Wind River Indian Reservation in Wyoming faced a violent crime rate 3.58 times the national rate, yet there were only 6–7 officers to patrol the entire 2.2 million acres of the Reservation during the entire 24 hour/7 day period. This staffing size translates into 2–3 officers on duty at any one time.

¹⁷The FY 2009 Department of the Interior Budget Justifications for Indian Affairs noted that there were 2,758 BIA and tribal criminal investigators and police serving Indian country. Interior Budget Justifications, IA-PSJ-6.

¹⁸This comparison to rural communities used by BIA is based on population, and not by violent crime rate. The staffing need based on the violent crime rate in Indian country would elicit an altogether different comparable population. The high violent crime rate in Indian country is more comparable to inner city violent crime rates. Arguably if assessed based on that comparability, the Indian country staffing needs may be severely more drastic.

¹⁹BIA-Office of Justice Services District 1, which serves reservations in Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Wisconsin, had an unmet staffing need of 78% according to the BIAs April 2006 Gap Analysis. The BIA acknowledged that “on many reservations, there is no 24-hour police coverage. Police officers often patrol alone and respond alone to both misdemeanor and felony calls. Our police officers are placed in great danger because backup is sometimes miles and hours away, if available at all.” Law Enforcement in Indian Country: Hearing Before the Senate Comm. on Indian Affairs, 110th Cong., at 6 (May 17, 2007) (statement of W. Patrick Ragsdale, Director, Bureau of Indian Affairs).

The lack of police personnel causes severe delays in response times to distress calls, prevents officers from securing the crime scene and gathering evidence, which in turn inhibits successful prosecutions.²⁰ The lack of resources also reduces the potential for crime prevention. According to Brian Nissen, Colville Tribal Council Member, “the officers know the individuals involved [in gang violence] and could make a dramatic impact on the proliferation of gangs . . . by preventing gang membership by vulnerable tribal youth. . . . This change cannot occur, however, until additional resources are available for tribal officers to allow for proactive, as opposed to reactive, policing.”²¹

While the lack of police personnel in Indian country is directly attributed to the lack of funding for BIA and tribal police officers, the difficulty in recruiting, training, and retaining new police and corrections officers adds to the problem. For example, the BIA requires all Bureau police officer candidates to receive their initial basic training at the Indian Police Academy (IPA) located in Artesia, New Mexico. The IPA provides an outstanding training opportunity for potential BIA and tribal police officer candidates. However, the Academy has an annual attrition rate of 47%, and only graduates an average of 220 new officers each year. Of those 220 graduates, it has been reported that one-half will leave Indian country law enforcement within two years.²² Tribal communities are left with a considerable unmet need for additional trained officers.

Section 301(a) of the bill takes several steps to expand recruiting efforts for new BIA and tribal police and corrections officers. This section expands training opportunities to permit BIA and tribal police candidates to receive basic training from state or tribal police academies, local or tribal community colleges, or other training academies that meet training standards established by the Federal Law Enforcement Training Accreditation commission.²³ This section also increases the maximum age for new police and corrections officers, in an effort to target retired military personnel.²⁴ In addition, Section 301 requires BIA Office of Justice Services to complete background checks for tribal and BIA police officer candidates within 60 days upon a request of an Indian tribe.

²³ The BIA has recognized training at state Police Officer Standards and Training (POST) and state-certified POST equivalents for tribal police officers. The BIA has also entered into MOAs with tribal, state, and local colleges and universities to provide supplemental training to existing BIA and tribal law enforcement and corrections officers. Nothing in this section is intended to repeal the Secretary’s authority to enter into such agreements.

The BIA and tribal jails system

The state of the BIA and tribal jails system exacerbates violent crime in Indian country. The majority of jails used by tribal courts to sentence offenders are either overcrowded, in disrepair, or both. In addition, jails operations lack sufficient staffing, training, and funding.²⁵ As a result, judges may be forced to release offenders early, and in some cases only the most violent offenders are incarcerated.

An Interior Department report on Indian jails entitled “Master Plan for Justice Services in Indian Country,” provided to the Committee on June 18, 2008, and made part of the June 19, 2008 Committee hearing record, made the following findings:

- The life and safety of officers and inmates are at risk due to the lack of adequate justice facilities and programs in Indian country.
- The character of offenses has changed from misdemeanors in years past to increasingly violent crimes in recent years.
- Ninety percent or more of the existing justice facilities that are older than 5 years should be replaced or require extensive improvements and repairs.
 - Jail policies are lax, and in many cases non-existent.
 - Jails are understaffed, and many staff lack adequate training.
 - It takes months to complete the hiring process for tribal corrections officers.
 - The lack of police personnel in Indian country causes a very low service call to arrest ratio in many jurisdictions.
 - Only half of the offenders are being incarcerated who should be incarcerated, the remaining are released through a variety of informal practices due to severe overcrowding.
 - Contract beds at state and local jails are not readily available due to the remote location of tribal communities and overcrowding at the state and local facilities.
 - Few tribal jails provide rehabilitation programs for inmates.
 - Little to no healthcare is provided for inmates, and the health care that is provided is often provided off-site at the nearest Indian Health Service facility.

One reason for problems with the jails system is the lack of coordination between federal agencies responsible for the system. The responsibility for construction of new BIA and tribal jails was transferred from the BIA to DOJ in the late 1990’s. The responsibility for staffing, operations, and maintenance of jails remained within the BIA’s budget. Because of the lack of inter-agency coordination, a number of new detention centers built in the last decade sit empty.²⁶ Other tribal jails remain severely overcrowded, and many tribal communities have no facility at all.

The Committee notes that $225 million was appropriated to the Department of Justice to construct detention centers in Indian country in the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act of 2009, Public Law 111–5 (Feb. 17, 2009).

Sections 101(b), 401(g)(1)(C), and 404(b)(3) of S. 797 require the Departments of Justice and Interior to coordinate with tribal justice officials to develop a long term plan for the incarceration needs of Indian country within one year of enactment of S. 797. The plan will address facilities for adults, youth in custody, at-risk youth, and alternatives to incarceration. The Committee expects the agencies to bring the full panoply of program expertise to bear in developing innovative solutions to fulfill these requirements.

In addition, Section 403 reauthorizes the Department of Justice tribal jails program. This section amends the program to permit funding for the construction of regional detention centers for long term incarceration, construction of tribal justice centers that combine tribal courts, police, and corrections services, and alternatives to incarceration. The amendment also removes requirement that tribal governments provide matching funds in order to be eligible to receive a jails construction grant.

Jurisdictional gaps

Consistent with previous federal reports, testimony before the Committee pointed to the jurisdictional divide among tribal, state, and Federal governments as a major contributing factor to reservation violence. One gap in the system is the lack of prosecution of misdemeanor crimes on Indian lands. Misdemeanor crimes including domestic violence, child abuse, disorderly conduct, traffic violations, petty drug possession, and property crimes are often overlooked by federal law enforcement officials due to resource concerns.²⁷ However, failure to address these crimes at the misdemeanor level creates a sense of lawlessness and provides no deterrent to those who may advance to more serious crimes.²⁸

The Tribal Law and Order Act will take several steps to better address misdemeanor reservation crimes. Section 103 encourages the appointment and training of qualified attorneys to serve as Special Assistant United States Attorneys to aid in the prosecution of misdemeanor crimes that are not addressed in tribal court. It also encourages U.S. Attorneys to coordinate with magistrate and district courts to ensure that docket time is reserved for Indian country misdemeanors and to hold such trials on Indian lands when possible. In addition, section 101(c) acknowledges the existing authority of Bureau of Indian Affairs police officers to enforce against offenses processed by the Central Violations Bureau.²⁹

²⁷In answers to follow up questions from a June 2008 hearing, DOJ wrote that it “handles a very limited number of misdemeanor offenses that occur in Indian Country, focusing on those offenses that involve non-Indian defendants who are alleged to have committed crimes against Indian victims. Often those misdemeanors are assaults. In Fiscal Year (FY) 2006, the United States Attorneys’ Offices prosecuted 24 misdemeanor cases arising in Indian Country. In FY 2007, the United States Attorneys’ Offices prosecuted 21 misdemeanor cases.” Letter from Keith B. Nelson, Principal Deputy Assistant Attorney General, to Senator Dorgan (Sept. 17, 2008).

²⁹The Department of Justice acknowledges that current law allows tribal law enforcement officers who hold Special Law Enforcement Commissions to “issue federal petty offense citations to any person including tribal members, non-member Indians, and non-Indians. Class A misdemeanors are charged either by an Information filed by the United States Attorneys’ Office or by Grand Jury Indictment.” Letter from Ronald Weich, Assistant Attorney General, to Senator Dorgan (Oct. 2, 2009).

Key provisions

A. BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS RESPONSE AND ACCOUNTABILITY

In 1990, Congress enacted the Indian Act Law Enforcement Reform Act (ILERA) in response to many of the concerns with the system of justice in place on Indian lands.³⁰ The Act codified the authority and duties of BIA police, permitted the Secretary to grant special law enforcement commissions (SLECs) to tribal and local police officers, and permitted federal investigators and prosecutors to submit declination reports to tribal justice officials. Tribal leaders initially praised the passage of the bill. However, in recent years, tribes have expressed that the Act's implementation has fallen short of expectations.

Section 2802 of ILERA established a Division of Law Enforcement Services, now known as the Office of Justice Services (OJS), and set forth its duties. This section also established a separate Branch of Criminal Investigations, which is responsible for the investigation and presentation for prosecution of major crimes in Indian country. It provides that the Branch of Criminal Investigations is subject only to the supervision and direction of law enforcement personnel of the OJS, and no longer subject to supervision of the BIA Agency Superintendent as was the current organizational structure at the time.³¹ OJS implemented this provision in the late 1990's, changing the command structure by requiring all BIA police and criminal investigators to report directly to the Office of Justice Services, headquartered in Washington, D.C.

In order to maintain communication between criminal investigators at the local reservation level, section 2802 required the Secretary to "prescribe regulations which shall establish a procedure for active cooperation and consultation of the criminal investigative employees . . . assigned to an Indian reservation with the governmental and law enforcement officials of the Indian tribe." To date, no such regulation has been promulgated.

A number of tribes have since complained about the lack of communication and consultation on behalf of BIA police with tribal governments and community members. Chairman Marcus Wells of the Three Affiliated Tribes of the Fort Berthold Reservation echoed these concerns in testimony before the Committee: "I believe we have been shorted when the line of authority for supervision was changed in 1999 or so, from the line superintendent of the BIA being the supervisor of the local police chief of the BIA, down to the Aberdeen area. Since then, we have lost communication and coordination."³²

Tribes have also criticized the BIA-OJS for a lack of transparency in spending public safety and justice funding. Ron His Horse Is Thunder, Chairman of the Standing Rock Sioux Indian Tribe, testified before the Committee regarding concerns over the lack of accountability at the BIA:

³¹ 25 U.S.C. § 2802(d)(4)(i). This provision also permits tribal governments, by tribal resolution, to ask the Secretary to reestablish line authority through the Agency Superintendent or Area Director. Such requests shall be granted absent good cause to the contrary. Id. § 2802(d)(4)(ii).

³² Law Enforcement in Indian Country: Hearing Before the Senate Comm. on Indian Affairs, 110th Cong., at 33 (June 21, 2007) (statement of Marcus D. Wells, Jr., Chairman, Three Affiliated Tribes of the Fort Berthold Reservation).

It is a fundamental failure for the BIA not to have or to successfully implement a methodology for the distribution of public safety funds. This problem is equally evident on the detention service side of public safety. It is our understanding that the BIA cannot report to the Interior Inspector General or to Congress how it allocated the millions of dollars it receives from Congress for the staffing, operation and maintenance of detention facilities in Indian country.³³

According to these tribal leaders, the former and even current command structures have not been responsive to concerns of the tribal leadership or communities being served.

To address these shortfalls, Section 101 of the bill seeks to improve BIA–OJS communication, coordination, and accountability. This section codifies the requirement that BIA–OJS officers communicate and consult with tribal leaders and members on a regular basis about public safety and justice concerns facing their communities. The intent is to require at least monthly communication between BIA police and the tribal community or communities that they serve. This section also requires BIA–OJS to submit annual reports to Congress detailing spending, unmet staffing needs, and formulas for disbursing public safety funding.

Another concern with the implementation of ILERA is in the granting of SLECs to tribal police officers. While the BIA recognizes the importance of the SLEC program in enabling officers to make arrests for all violations of federal criminal laws on Indian lands,³⁴ the Bureau has not established specific criteria, timeframes for approval, or provided training opportunities or technical assistance to tribal officers to obtain the commissions.

Tribal leaders testified before the Committee that the delays in negotiating agreements with the BIA for SLECs can take years. Diane Enos, President of the Salt River Pima Maricopa Indian Community (Arizona), testified that her Tribe had negotiated for more than four years on an MOU with the BIA to enable tribal officers to obtain special law enforcement commissions.³⁵

To spur the SLEC program, the U.S. Attorney from Colorado in February of 2007 initiated a pilot program to train tribal, state and local law enforcement officers on-site in Southwestern Colorado in the enforcement of federal criminal laws. The goal was to increase the number of available police officers on Indian lands in Colorado and foster inter-jurisdictional collaboration. With the cooperation of other U.S. Attorneys, this pilot program grew into 14 separate training sessions throughout Indian country, attended by more than 400 officers representing 35 tribes and 17 states.³⁶

To build on the success of this pilot program and to provide added guidance to the program, section 301(b) of the Tribal Law and Order Act will amend the ILERA to require the Secretary, within 180 days of enactment, to establish criteria for police officers to meet in order to qualify for SLEC certifications. The Secretary would also have 180 days to develop minimum requirements to be included in agreements with tribal governments, which must include protections for tribal officers listed in current section 2804(f) of the ILERA. To expand the opportunity for tribal police to obtain an SLEC, section 301(b) of the bill also requires the Secretary to hold regional training sessions in Indian country to train tribal and other police officers in the enforcement of federal criminal laws.

B. DECLINATIONS TO PROSECUTE RESERVATION CRIME

The justice system in place on Indian lands forces tribal communities to rely on federal officials to investigate and prosecute most violent crimes occurring in Indian country. Despite this reliance, tribal leaders and community members have, for decades, raised concerns that federal officials do not prioritize the investigation and prosecution of reservation crime. Tribal justice officials have also criticized the lack of communication, information sharing, and data collection on the part of federal officials regarding reservation crimes.

In hearings held from 1961–1964, that eventually led to enactment of the Indian Civil Rights Act (ICRA), tribal leaders and tribal justice officials lodged complaints that the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) and U.S. Attorneys failed to adequately respond to reservation crime. In 1961, Judge Shirley Nelson of the Hualapai Tribal Court testified to the following:

[T]his seems to be one of our main problems in criminal cases, the major crimes—trying to get the Government to come in and take these crimes. . . . We have called the FBI, and they have run the investigation for us; we have called it to the attention of the U.S. attorney, and he has declined to take the case. He didn't give us any reason for not accepting the case.³⁷

This and other statements led the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights of the Senate Judiciary Committee to conclude that “Federal authorities are slow to investigate and accept jurisdiction over crimes committed on Indian reservations.”³⁸

In 1975, the Ford Administration’s Department of Justice (DOJ) Report of the Task Force on Indian Matters acknowledged similar complaints from tribal leaders about the high rates of declinations. The Task Force studied the issue and made the following finding:³⁹

While a review of the available evidence demonstrates that there is no conscious or systematic discriminatory handling of Indian cases, it appears that current federal practices and standards applied in determining declinations in Indian cases have created a serious problem for the overall maintenance of law and order on reservations and have undermined the respect and confidence which the Indian people feel in the federal government's efforts to respond to the growing crime rate. . . . At a minimum there has been a breakdown in communication between the Justice Department and Indian communities. At a maximum, the federal government is exacerbating the reservation crime problem and undermining Indian confidence in a system of laws by prosecuting so few offenders.⁴⁰

The Task Force acknowledged that the system in place requires federal prosecutors to also serve as the local prosecutor for Indian communities. The Task Force concluded that "[i]n failing to adapt prosecutive standards and practices to meet this responsibility, the government has contributed to the reservation crime problem and undermined the confidence of Indian people in a system of laws."⁴¹

The Task Force recommended that DOJ develop guidelines and procedures to meet the government's dual role as both federal and local prosecutor on Indian lands, improve communication and coordination with tribal justice officials, and discuss possible efforts by the federal district and magistrate courts to make justice less remote to reservation communities.⁴²

Congress enacted the Indian Law Enforcement Reform Act (ILERA) in 1990, in part, to address concerns with high declination rates and a lack of communication between federal and tribal justice officials. Section 2809 of ILERA provides that "the United States attorney is authorized to submit a report to the appropriate governmental and law enforcement officials of the Indian tribe" when declining to prosecute an alleged violation of federal criminal law occurring in Indian country. A similar provision authorizes FBI agents and BIA police to submit reports to tribal officials when terminating criminal investigations. The provision also permits federal officials to share evidence with tribal officials to help build a prosecution in tribal court.

Tribes contend that despite this authorization, few U.S. Attorney offices share evidence or other case information when declining a case. They contend that the lack of coordination has prevented prosecutions in tribal court. One tribal court judge testified before the Committee that "We don't have information at all. . . . [T]ribal prosecutors and tribal courts are left with trying to decide whether they should use their resources to prosecute without any information from the Department of Justice."⁴³

The Committee also faced difficulty in obtaining data regarding Indian country declinations from DOJ. In response to Committee requests for statistics on Indian country declinations during the 110th Congress, the Justice Department repeatedly stated that it did not believe that declination statistics “accurately reflect the rate of declinations in Indian Country.”⁴⁴ The Department also stated that there are profound differences in case tracking systems employed by the various U.S. Attorneys’ offices, thus, making it difficult to gather statistics for Indian country criminal cases.⁴⁵

In written response to follow up questions from a June 25, 2009 Committee hearing, DOJ provided the Committee with declination data for FY 2007 and FY 2008. The Department reported that Indian country declination rates were 52.2% for FY 2007 and 47% for FY 2008. The Department also reported that the declination rates for non-Indian country federal prosecutions were 20.7% for FY 2007 and 15.6% for FY 2008. These statistics were gathered using DOJ’s case management system, the Legal Information Office Network System (LIONS). DOJ restated that its case management system is not designed to collect data to track Indian country criminal declinations. However, the Department stated that it is exploring ways to improve the tracking of declinations in Indian Country.⁴⁶

The Committee acknowledges that declination statistics alone do not show the Department’s commitment to combating reservation crime. In fact, they likely reflect difficulties caused by the justice system in place. The lack of police on the ground in Indian country often results in delayed responses to criminal activity, which prevents officers from securing the crime scene and gathering evidence. The lack of rape kits and qualified interviewers and examiners in Indian country also makes it difficult to build a sexual assault case for prosecution. For these reasons, Committee Members explained, declination data could be used to target the appropriate federal district for increased funding to meet the shortfalls for training, forensics equipment, personnel, or to address other needs caused by the system.⁴⁷

The investigation and prosecution of reservation crimes are to some extent subject to the priorities set forth by the Administration that is in place at any given time. Senator Dorgan highlighted concerns with prioritizing the prosecution of Indian country crimes in a discussion of recent firings of U.S. Attorneys who worked on Native American issues for the Department of Justice. The following are excerpts from the discussion between Senator Dorgan and Mr. Thomas Heffelfinger, the former U.S. Attorney from Minnesota:⁴⁸

Nelson, Principal Deputy Assistant Attorney General, Views on S. 3320, to Senator Dorgan, at 3 (Sept. 17, 2008) (“Federal declination figures cannot give a complete picture of how Indian Country crimes are prosecuted, and could lead to inaccurate conclusions.”).

The highest declination rates found by the Post were for child sex crimes (72%) and adult sex crimes (76.5%). This data was compiled by the Transactional Records Access Clearinghouse (TRAC). While not directly disputing the Denver Post data, the Department noted that it also cannot confirm the accuracy of the figures provided to the Denver Post by TRAC.

⁴⁸ Mr. Heffelfinger was placed on a list of U.S. Attorneys to be dismissed, but resigned in February of 2006. He is also former Chairman of the Attorney General’s Native American Issues Subcommittee.

Senator Dorgan: “I notice that either four of the eight or five of the eight U.S. Attorneys who were in fact replaced were on the committee, the committee that you were on, dealing with Native Americans. Is that purely coincidence?”

Mr. Thomas Heffelfinger: “I can tell you that all of those five people were zealous advocates in their own districts for improving public safety in Indian Country and improving Indian Country’s role in our broader homeland security infrastructure. . . . But it is not a mere coincidence that five of eight were leaders amongst Native American prosecutors.”⁴⁹

The FY 2008 United States Attorneys’ Statistical Report states that “[i]n carrying out their criminal prosecution responsibilities, the United States Attorneys are guided by the law enforcement and special prosecution priorities of the Attorney General. These areas are set forth in the Department’s Strategic Plan and Performance Report.”⁵⁰ The stated priorities for FY 2008 included prosecution of crimes of terrorism, firearms, narcotics, Organized Crime Drug Enforcement Task Forces (OCDETF), non-OCDETF drugs, crimes against children, corporate fraud, cybercrimes, official corruption, civil rights prosecution, trafficking in persons, bias motivated crimes, and official police misconduct/color of law.⁵¹ A nearly identical list was provided in the FY 2007 Report. To the Committee’s knowledge, during no Administration has the Department of Justice included the prosecution of violent crime in Indian country at or near the top of its priority list.

As noted at the onset of this Report, the United States has incurred a legal obligation to investigate and prosecute crimes in Indian country that has existed for more than 120 years. S. 797 was developed acknowledging the longstanding history of violence in Indian country. The bill seeks to ensure that the investigation and prosecution of reservation crimes is a priority for the current and all future Administrations by clarifying the Government’s obligations to combat and prevent Indian country crime.

The substitute amendment to S. 797 reflects a number of changes to Section 102 in response to comments from the Department of Justice. As amended, Section 102 will improve coordination between federal and tribal justice officials and accountability for the Federal Government’s obligations to investigate and prosecute reservation crime. Section 102 would amend section 2809 of ILERA, by requiring the Department to maintain data on reservation case terminations and declinations by federal district, including data on the type of crime, and the status of both the victim and defendant as Indian or not. In addition, the section will require DOJ to submit an annual report to Congress on the findings with an explanatory statement. The provision also requires federal investigators and prosecutors to coordinate with tribal justice officials regarding the use of evidence when terminating an investigation or declining a case for prosecution.

Section 102 makes clear that no federal agency or official is required to disclose confidential, privileged, or statutorily protected information. The intent of this provision is to protect future prosecutions and the safety and privacy of both the victim and the suspect. Communications between federal and tribal justice officials should be considered privileged information for purposes of this provision.

C. TRIBAL COURT SENTENCING

When federal officials decline to prosecute alleged reservation crimes, tribal courts often provide the last opportunity for justice for the victim and the tribal community. However, the Indian Civil Rights Act (ICRA) limits the sentencing authority of tribal courts to no more than one year imprisonment for any one offense.⁵² As a result, tribal courts cannot provide a full measure of justice when trying cases of homicide, rape, child sexual abuse, aggravated assault, or other serious crimes. Section 304 of the bill will amend ICRA to acknowledge a tribal court's authority to sentence offenders for up to three years where certain requirements are met.

The current limit on tribal court sentencing was imposed through enactment of ICRA. In the 1960's, during Senate hearings leading up to passage of ICRA, testimony revealed that tribal courts were essentially justices of the peace, which dealt primarily with petty offenses.⁵³ As a result, Congress initially passed ICRA limiting tribal court sentences to no more than 6 months for any one offense. Congress amended ICRA in 1986 to acknowledge tribal court authority to impose sentences of no more than one year for any one offense.⁵⁴

Facts have changed dramatically in the past twenty years. Tribal courts are increasingly trying violent offenses and tribal jails are holding more violent offenders. In testimony before the Committee, one tribal prosecutor stated that "I have a jury trial that is scheduled on a murder, a homicide case on the end of this month. . . . We just finished a trial on a juvenile who was convicted of homicide in our court. . . ." ⁵⁵ Former U.S. Attorney General Janet ⁵² Indian Civil Rights Act (ICRA), 25 U.S.C. § 1302(7). ICRA, often referred to as the Indian Bill of Rights, provides that "[n]o Indian tribe in exercising powers of self-government shall—violate the right . . . against unreasonable search and seizures, nor issue warrants, but upon probable cause. . . ; subject any person for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy; compel any person in any criminal case to be a witness against himself; deny to any person in a criminal proceeding the right to a speedy and public trial, to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation, to be confronted with the witnesses against him, to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and at his own expense to have the assistance of counsel for his defense; require excessive bail, impose excessive fines, inflict cruel and unusual punishments, and in no event impose for conviction of any one offense any penalty or punishment greater than imprisonment for a term of one year and a fine of $5,000, or both; deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of its laws or deprive any person of liberty or property without due process of law; deny to any person accused of an offense punishable by imprisonment the right, upon request, to a trial by jury of not less than six persons. 25 U.S.C. § 1302. The Act also provides that "[t]he privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall be available to any person, in a court of the United States, to test the legality of his detention by order of an Indian tribe." 25 U.S.C. § 1303.

Reno acknowledged that “[t]he lack of a system of graduated sanctions through tribal court . . . directly contributes to the escalation of adult and juvenile criminal activity.”⁵⁶

To address these concerns and to enable tribal courts to dispense a greater measure of justice for the criminal cases presented to them, section 304 of the bill relaxes the sentencing limits imposed by the Indian Civil Rights Act (ICRA) where certain requirements are met. Section 304 leaves the current ICRA one year imprisonment limitation in effect. However, it offers tribal governments the option to subject a defendant to more than one year and up to three years of imprisonment for any one offense if the tribe meets the following requirements:

- Provide defendants with current ICRA protections against: unreasonable search and seizure, double jeopardy, being compelled to testify against oneself, being subject to excessive bail or cruel and unusual punishment, and the denial of equal protection or due process. Tribes must also continue to comply with ICRA requirements of affording defendants the right to a speedy trial, to be informed of the crime for which they have been accused, to be confronted by witnesses against them, to obtain witnesses in their favor, or to have a jury trial.
- Provide an indigent defendant a licensed attorney at the tribe’s expense.
- Require that the judge presiding over the criminal trial have sufficient legal training and be licensed in any jurisdiction in the United States.⁵⁷
- Publish the tribe’s criminal laws.

All tribal justice systems may continue to operate under current ICRA sentencing limitations of no more than one year imprisonment for any one offense. The Committee emphasizes that the intent of section 304 is to provide tribal governments the option of enacting tribal criminal laws that would be subject to up to three years imprisonment. If, pursuant to new subsection (b) of ICRA, 25

⁵⁶*Department of Justice/Department of Interior Tribal Justice Initiatives: Hearing Before the Senate Comm. on Indian Affairs, 105th Cong., at 55 (June 3, 1998) (statement of United States Attorney General Janet Reno).*

⁵⁷The Committee received comments contending that tribal court judges and public defenders should be required to graduate from an accredited law school and licensed by a state supreme court. The Committee notes that the States of California, Maine, New York, Vermont, Virginia, Washington and Wyoming do not require attorneys to graduate from an accredited law school in order to practice law or serve as a judge.

The intent of the section 304 licensing requirements for public defenders and tribal court judges respects the dual purposes of the Indian Civil Rights Act to protect the rights of individuals before tribal courts, and to acknowledge and strengthen tribal self-government. Section 304 requires tribal governments that enact criminal laws subjecting offenders to more than one year imprisonment for any one offense to also require attorneys and judges presiding over such criminal trials to meet certain licensing standards. Whether the standard employed is a state, federal, or tribal standard will be a decision for the tribal government. Several tribal governments have developed their own tribal law standards and others have adopted state licensing standards. The Indian Civil Rights Act requires tribal governments to afford individual defendants basic rights at trial. If any of these rights are allegedly violated because an individual was provided ineffective representation, the offender has the right to ask for a review the tribal court’s decision in federal court through a writ of habeas corpus.

The Committee notes the importance of providing individuals subject to more than one year imprisonment for any one offense the effective assistance of defense counsel. To help implement this provision, the Committee encourages the Bureau of Indian Affairs in coordination with the Department of Justice to consult with tribal governments to establish recommended minimum guidelines for public defenders to be used by tribal justice systems in developing tribal government licensing standards where a tribe chooses not to adopt state standards.

U.S.C. §1302, a tribe enacts a law that subjects an offender to more than one year for any one offense, and the tribal prosecutor charges the suspect with a violation of that law, then the requirements of subsection (b) will have to be met in the criminal trial that would ensue. If, after trial, the suspect is found guilty in tribal court of the offense charged, the tribal court judge will retain authority and discretion under tribal law to sentence the offender to any term of imprisonment, up to three years for any one offense, or any alternative form of punishment the court deems necessary.

The Committee also acknowledges that in order for the options established under this section to be made available to all tribes, Congress must provide funding for tribal public defender programs. To address this concern, section 304(b) clarifies that legal services funding can be used for public defender services for all crimes charged in tribal court systems, as opposed to only misdemeanors as is provided under current law. Section 402 of the bill acknowledges that funding provided to tribal court programs administered by the Departments of the Interior and Justice can be used to improve public defender programs.

Former U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno supported the concept of increasing tribal court sanctions in testimony before the Committee in the 105th Congress, stating that “[t]he range of sanctions available to tribes should include detention for serious violent offenders, drug courts, and other alternatives.”⁵⁸ The current Administration made reference to this provision in a recent letter to the Committee: “The Department acknowledges that some tribal courts may have the capacity to impose sentences greater than one year for one offense, in accord with the required protections included in section 304 of S. 797. That provision serves as an acknowledgement of inherent tribal court authority.”⁵⁹

Bureau of Prisons pilot project

Because of the limited sentencing authority of tribal courts, most tribal jails were built with short-term incarceration in mind, and many may not be fit for long term incarceration. However, because tribal courts have increasingly tried violent criminal cases that are declined for prosecution in the federal system, tribal jails house a mix of both petty criminals and violent offenders.

To address these concerns and to broaden the already wide array of sentencing options available to tribal courts, section 304 of the bill authorizes tribal courts, when subjecting defendants to more than one year for any one offense, to sentence offenders to serve the term:

- In a tribal jail that is approved by BIA for long term incarceration.
- In a state or local government facility pursuant to an agreement with the tribal government.
- In a tribe’s alternative rehabilitation center or pursuant to an alternative form of sentencing pursuant to tribal law.

The Bureau of Prisons (BOP) Pilot Project is intended to give tribal courts, without adequate facilities, the option to sentence violent offenders to serve their term of imprisonment in the nearest appropriate federal facility.⁶⁰ S. 797 requires the Director of the BOP to establish the program within 120 days of enactment. Under the program, tribal courts would initiate the request along with information relevant to the conviction to the DOJ. The Department would then have 30 days to act on the request. The pilot project is limited to no more than 100 offenders at any one time, and is limited in duration to four years from the date of establishment of the program unless reauthorized. The Attorney General is directed to submit a report to Congress no later than three years from the date of establishment of the program describing the status of the program and any recommendation for reauthorization.

D. COMBATING DOMESTIC AND SEXUAL VIOLENCE

Committee hearings revealed an epidemic of domestic violence and sexual assault in Indian country, far too many of which go unreported and unpunished. Government reports cite the facts that 34% of American Indian and Alaska Native women will be raped in their lifetimes,⁶¹ and 39% of Indian women will suffer domestic violence.⁶² The Committee received testimony pointing to several causes for the prevalence of violence against Native women: (1) a lack of resources for police to investigate these crimes and resources to collect evidence, (2) a lack of police training for investigations and evidence collection, and (3) a lack of urgency at the federal level in investigating and prosecuting crimes of domestic and sexual violence.⁶³

⁶⁰The concept for the Bureau of Prisons pilot project acknowledges the Federal Government's responsibility to provide public safety on Indian lands and was based in part on the National Capital Revitalization and Self-Government Improvement Act that directed the transfer of prisoners confined in Washington, D.C. prisons to the Federal Bureau of Prisons. Public Law 105-33 (Aug. 5, 1997). The analogy between the Federal responsibility for public safety in the Nation's Capitol and in Indian country was noted in the Ford Administration's Report of the Task Force on Indian Matters. Doris M. Meissner, U.S. Department of Justice, Report of the Task Force on Indian Matters, at 51 (Oct. 1975) ("The District of Columbia is also a federal enclave in which the federal government must play a state government role in the criminal justice area in a manner similar to that required of it with respect to Indian communities.")

The high levels of impunity can become an incentive for perpetrators to commit further crimes. And she had reported it, she said the criminal investigator told her, sounds to me like you need to change your lifestyle."); id. (statement of Tammy Young, Director, Alaska Native Women's Coalition) ("We have a young woman in a small village, about 150 people, called not just once, but three different times, feeling as though maybe they didn't understand what she was explaining to them, what had actually happened. An entire year went by and no response other than the interview on the phone. No other person was contacted."). See also, Law Enforcement in Indian Country, Hearing Before the Senate Comm. on Indian Affairs, 110th Cong., at 18 (June 21, 2009) (statement of Bonnie Clairmont, Victim Advocacy Program Specialist, Tribal Law and Policy Institute).

Other recent reports confirmed these findings. The Amnesty International U.S.A. April 2007 Report Maze of Injustice: The Failure to protect Indigenous women from sexual violence in the USA studied Indian communities in Alaska, North Dakota, and Oklahoma. On the topic of resources, the Report found that as of February 2006, only 7 BIA police officers patrolled the 2.3 million acre Standing Rock Sioux Reservation that straddles the border between North Dakota and South Dakota.⁶⁴ The Reservation had only 2–3 officers on duty at any one time. As a result, “[w]omen on the Reservation who report sexual violence often have to wait for hours or even days before receiving a response. . . . Sometimes there is no response at all.”⁶⁵ The Report noted when a victim’s call is answered the local health facility often lacks the necessary rape kit or specialized training. In addition, 44% of Indian Health Service (IHS) facilities lack personnel trained to provide emergency services to respond to sexual violence, and 30% lack the basic protocols for treating victims.⁶⁶

The impact of the lack of resources is felt by the victim, the community, and the individual officers alike. A National Public Radio report also highlighted the problems of prosecuting domestic violence and sexual assaults in Indian country. In a report titled Rape Cases on Indian Lands Go Uninvestigated, one former BIA police officer was quoted as saying that he was too overwhelmed to keep up with distress calls for sexual assault. When it came to federal prosecutors, he stated, “We all knew they only take the ones with a confession . . . We were forced to triage our cases. . . . I felt like I was standing in the middle of the river trying to hold back the flood.”⁶⁷

This predicament is aggravated by the difficulty in prosecuting offenders when crimes are reported. While no federal agency has provided detailed statistics regarding declinations to prosecute Indian country sexual assaults, the Denver Post, in a series of investigative reports, found that 76.5% of adult rapes against Indian women, and 72% of sex crimes against Indian children were declined for prosecution between 2004 and 2007.⁶⁸

To address issues of federal accountability, section 102, discussed above, would require federal investigators and prosecutors to maintain data on all case terminations and declinations to prosecute allegations of sexual and domestic violence in Indian country. In addition, when a case is terminated or declined, section 102 requires federal officials to coordinate with tribal police and prosecutors on the use of evidence for a concurrent prosecution in tribal court. Section 304 acknowledges that tribal courts can sentence offenders for up to three years imprisonment for any one offense so that the possible punishment for rapes and sexual assaults prosecuted in tribal courts better meets the crime.

Title VI of S. 797 addresses a number of other issues to improve investigation, and prosecution of reservation domestic and sexual violence. Section 601 will require federal officials to notify the tribal justice officials at least 5 days prior to releasing convicted sex offenders from custody onto Indian lands or approving the change of residence of offenders on probation into Indian country. Current law requires federal officials to only notify the state or local jurisdiction, leaving tribal communities uninformed about the presence of sexual predators.

Section 602 expands the duties of the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) Office of Justice Services to require training of officers in interviewing victims of domestic and sexual violence and in collecting, preserving, and presenting evidence to federal and tribal prosecutors. The intent of this section is to improve the services provided to victims of domestic and sexual violence and increase the conviction rates for such offenses committed in Indian country.

Section 603 would require federal employees to testify in tribal or state court pursuant to subpoena on matters within the scope of their duties. This provision was adopted in response to statements from tribal court judges and prosecutors who noted that it was often difficult to obtain testimony from BIA police or Indian Health Service (IHS) doctors or nurses.

Section 604 would require the BIA, IHS, and DOJ to coordinate on the development of victim services, victim advocate training programs, and identification of obstacles to prosecuting crimes of domestic violence, sexual assault, and sex trafficking. The intent of this section is to enhance inter-agency coordination to combat the prevalence of domestic and sexual violence. This provision may be particularly useful in addressing the troubling victim and witness intimidation that occurs in these types of cases and the Committee encourages the agencies to include aggressive strategies to address this barrier.

Section 605 would require the IHS to establish standardized sexual assault protocol at tribal health facilities. This section was adopted in response to findings that 30% of IHS facilities did not have protocols in place for emergency services in cases of sexual violence.

Section 607 requires the Government Accountability Office to conduct a study of the capability of IHS facilities in remote Indian reservations and Alaska Native villages to collect, maintain and secure evidence of sexual assault and domestic violence incidents required for criminal prosecution and develop recommendations for improving those capabilities. The committee is concerned that the IHS may not be adequately funded to retain and/or train the personnel necessary to perform these functions and to ensure that this capacity exists in remote Indian communities.

VI. SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF S. 797 AS AMENDED

TITLE I. FEDERAL ACCOUNTABILITY AND COORDINATION

Section 101. Office of Justice Services

Section 101(b) would require the Interior Department's Office of Justice Services (OJS) to hold regular consultations with tribal leaders, and to provide technical assistance and training to tribal police. This provision would also require OJS to submit annual spending and unmet needs reports to Congress. OJS would be required to coordinate with the Department of Justice (DOJ) to develop a long term plan to address concerns with the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) and tribal jails system. Finally, it would also require OJS to submit short and long term plans to fill BIA and tribal police officer vacancies.

Section 101(c) would authorize BIA police to make warrantless arrests where the officer has “probable cause” to believe that the suspect has committed or is committing certain crimes. Current law requires officers to have “reasonable grounds” to make a warrantless arrest. This provision also adds a list of offenses for which BIA police may make a warrantless arrest, including certain controlled substances, firearms, assaults, and liquor trafficking violations.

Section 102. Dispositions reports

This section would require U.S. Attorneys to coordinate with tribal justice officials on the use of evidence when declining to prosecute a reservation crime. It would also require U.S. Attorneys to maintain data on declinations, and to publish an annual report on declinations by federal district, type of crime, and status of the defendant and victim as Indian or not.

Section 103. Prosecution of crimes in Indian country

Section 103(a) would clarify that U.S. Attorneys may appoint tribal prosecutors and other Indian law experts as special Assistant U.S. Attorneys to prosecute reservation crimes in federal court. This provision would encourage such appointments, in consultation with affected tribes. Section 103 would also urge U.S. Attorneys to coordinate with federal courts when making such appointments.

Section 103(b) would require the appointment of Assistant United States Attorneys to serve as Tribal Liaisons. It would also define their responsibilities to include: coordinating the prosecution of reservation crimes, developing multi-disciplinary task forces, and communicating and providing technical assistance to tribal law enforcement officials.

Section 104. Administration

Section 104(a) would elevate and make permanent the Office of Tribal Justice (OTJ) within the Department of Justice. It would also define the OTJ’s role to develop and direct the Department’s Indian affairs policies, and coordinate and consult with tribal leaders on matters affecting tribal interests.

Section 104(b) would establish a Native American Issues Coordinator within the Executive Office of U.S. Attorneys. The Coordinator would be responsible for working with tribal liaisons to enhance prosecution of reservation crimes, coordinating task forces to address Indian country crime, and gathering information for criminal declination data reports to Congress.

Section 105. Prescription drug monitoring

This section would direct the Secretary of Health and Human Services to establish a prescription drug monitoring program to be carried out at Indian Health Service and tribal health facilities and require the Attorney General to provide training to prevent the abuse of prescription drugs.

TITLE II. STATE ACCOUNTABILITY AND COORDINATION

Section 201. State criminal jurisdiction and resources

Section 201 would permit an Indian tribe to request federal assistance in investigating and prosecuting reservation crimes, which, upon consent to the request by the Attorney General, would provide the United States with concurrent authority over certain reservation crimes.

Section 202. Incentives for tribal-state cooperation

Section 202 would authorize the Attorney General to provide grants, technical, and other assistance to encourage tribal, state, and local law enforcement agencies to enter into cooperative law enforcement agreements to combat crime in Indian country and nearby communities.

TITLE III. EMPOWERING TRIBAL JUSTICE SYSTEMS

Section 301. Tribal police officers

Section 301(a) would require the Department of the Interior-OJS to permit greater flexibility in training of police officers serving Indian country, including permitting candidates to train at state and tribal academies, tribal colleges and other training centers that meet relevant federal training standards. This provision would also raise the maximum age for new officers to 46 and would require the BIA to expedite background checks for police and corrections officer candidates.

Section 301(b) would enhance existing law to grant Special Law Enforcement Commissions (SLEC) to officers serving Indian lands to enforce violations of federal law. It would require the BIA to provide regional trainings to certify officers, and add requirements to set timelines for SLEC-related agreements between the BIA and tribal governments.

Section 301(c) would establish an Indian Law Enforcement Foundation that would be tasked with advancing the role of BIA and tribal law enforcement officers and the provision of public safety and justice services in American Indian and Alaska Native communities.

Section 302. Drug enforcement in Indian country

Section 302 would authorize the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) to provide grants and technical assistance to tribal police to address drug trafficking in Indian country. This provision would also require the DEA to place tribal officers on the advisory panel to develop and coordinate educational programs to fight drug trafficking.

Section 303. Access to national crime databases

Section 303 would enhance tribal police officer access and ability to input information into the National Crime Information Center and similar federal criminal databases. The provision establishes tribal officers as authorized law enforcement officials for purposes of access to such databases.

Section 304. Tribal court sentencing

This section would acknowledge the ability of tribal courts to sentence offenders for up to 3 years imprisonment for any one offense of a tribal criminal law. If a tribe exercises this option, the tribe must provide indigent defendants a licensed defense attorney, the tribal court judges presiding over the case must be licensed and law trained, and the tribe must publish its criminal laws. Tribal courts exercising this option may to sentence offenders to serve time in: (1) a tribal facility that meets minimum federal standards; (2) the nearest appropriate federal facility pursuant to a pilot project administered by the Bureau of Prisons; (3) in a state facility pursuant to a tribal-state agreement; or (4) the tribe's alternative rehabilitation center or an alternative form of sentencing pursuant to tribal law.

Section 305. Indian Law and Order Commission

Section 306 would establish an Indian Law and Order Commission made up of tribal, federal, and state & local justice officials, and other experts. The Commission would be tasked with reviewing the current justice system as it relates to Indian lands and providing recommendations to enhance the prosecution and prevention of crime in Indian country. Specific items to be reviewed include: criminal jurisdiction; the tribal jails system; and the tribal juvenile justice system.

TITLE IV. RESOURCES FOR TRIBAL JUSTICE PROGRAMS

Section 401. Indian alcohol and substance abuse

This section would reauthorize and amend the Indian Alcohol and Substance Abuse Act (IASA), which provides grants for summer youth programs, to develop tribal juvenile codes, and to construct shelters and detention and treatment centers for at risk youth and juvenile offenders. This provision would also direct the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Administration (SAMHSA) to take the lead role in interagency coordination on tribal substance abuse programs. SAMHSA would establish and appoint a Director of the Office of Indian Alcohol and Substance Abuse that would develop a framework for setting interagency communication goals, and provide technical assistance to tribal governments to develop and enhance alcohol and substance abuse prevention programs.

Section 402. Tribal courts programs

Section 402 would reauthorize the Indian Tribal Justice Support and Technical & Legal Assistance Acts, which provide funding for tribal court judicial personnel, public defenders, court facilities, development of records management systems, and other needs of tribal court systems.

Section 404. DOJ tribal jails program

This section would reauthorize and amend the DOJ tribal jails construction program. It would authorize and encourage the construction of regional detention centers for long-term incarceration, tribal justice centers that combine courts, police, and corrections services, and would require DOJ, in coordination with the BIA, to develop a long-term plan for the construction, maintenance, and operation of tribal detention and alternative rehabilitation centers.

Section 405. Assistant probation officers

Section 405 would authorize and encourage the appointment of Indian country residents to serve as assistant probation officers to monitor federal prisoners living on or reentering Indian lands. This provision would also encourage the federal courts to offer services on or near Indian lands.

Section 406. Tribal youth program

Section 406 would amend the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act, 42 U.S.C. 5783, by establishing a Tribal Youth Program in Title V of that Act, authorizing competitive grants to tribes for activities aimed at preventing juvenile delinquency and treating and rehabilitating juvenile offenders.

Section 407. Improving public safety in rural Alaska

This section would make Alaska Village Public Safety Officer positions eligible for Community Oriented Policing Services funding. This provision is intended only to provide access to training and establish a training grant program, and neither directly nor by implication defines the jurisdiction of tribes in Alaska.

TITLE V. INDIAN COUNTRY CRIME DATA COLLECTION AND INFORMATION SHARING

Section 501. Uniform Indian country crime reporting

Section 501(a) requires the National Gang Intelligence Center to collect, analyze, and disseminate information on gang activity in Indian country. Section 501(b) would make tribal governments eligible for federal grants that promote criminal data collection and criminal history reporting. It would also require the DOJ's Bureau of Justice Statistics to report Indian country criminal data to Congress on an annual basis.

Section 502. Tribal data collection program

This section would authorize and direct the Interior Department's Office of Justice Services, in coordination with the Department of Justice, to develop a program to aid tribal police department efforts to establish and improve criminal data collection systems.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the enclosed cost estimate for S. 797, the Tribal Law and Order Act of 2009.

Enclosure.

S. 797—Tribal Law and Order Act of 2009

Summary: S. 797 would establish or reauthorize various programs and offices within the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) and the Department of Justice (DOJ) to support the criminal justice system on Indian lands. Assuming appropriation of the necessary amounts, CBO estimates that implementing S. 797 would cost nearly $1.1 billion over the 2010–2014 period and about $380 million after 2014. Enacting the bill would not affect direct spending or revenues.

S. 797 would authorize the appropriation of $566 million over the 2010–2014 period for BIA and DOJ to carry out the bill's provisions. In addition, CBO estimates that appropriations totaling another $880 million over the five-year period would be necessary for those purposes.

S. 797 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act (UMRA) and would impose no costs on state, local, or tribal governments.

Estimated cost to the Federal Government: The estimated budgetary impact of S. 797 is shown in the following table. The costs of this legislation fall within budget functions 450 (community and regional development) and 750 (administration of justice).

	By fiscal year, in millions of dollars—

Estimated Outlays	80	186	238	272	294	1,070

Basis of estimate: For this estimate, CBO assumes that S. 797 will be enacted near the start of fiscal year 2010, that the necessary amounts will be appropriated each year, and that spending will follow the historical spending patterns for those or similar activities.

Programs with specified funding levels

S. 797 would authorize the appropriation of $566 million over the 2010–2014 period for BIA and DOJ programs to improve the operation of the criminal justice system on Indian lands. Specifically, the bill would authorize the appropriation of:

- $50 million annually over the 2010–2014 period for BIA to support the development, enhancement, and operation of tribal justice systems;
- $35 million annually over the 2010–2014 period for DOJ to make grants to Indian tribes for the construction and maintenance of detention facilities and tribal justice centers;
- $10 million annually over the 2010–2014 period for BIA to operate emergency shelters for Indian youth who abuse alcohol or illegal substances;
- $10 million annually over the 2011–2015 period for DOJ to make grants to Indian tribes to improve public safety in Alaska Native villages; and
- A total of $10 million annually over the 2010–2014 period for other BIA programs to enhance tribal law enforcement, combat substance abuse on Indian lands, and support tribal courts.

Other programs

S. 797 also would authorize the appropriation of whatever sums are necessary over the 2010–2014 period for BIA and DOJ programs to support the operation of the criminal justice system on Indian lands. CBO estimates that appropriations for those purposes would total $883 million. We estimate that, in total, implementing those programs would cost $605 million over the 2010–2014 period.

Specifically, the bill would authorize appropriations for DOJ to make grants to:

- State, local, and tribal governments for programs to prevent juvenile delinquency and assist juvenile offenders (in 2009, about $62 million was appropriated for this program);
- Tribes to hire and equip law enforcement officers (in 2009, about $20 million was appropriated for this program); and
- Tribes to support tribal courts and legal assistance programs (in 2009, about $9 million was appropriated for this program).

CBO estimates that continuing those programs at the current level and adjusting for anticipated inflation over the 2010–2014 period would cost $286 million over the five-year period.

Section 401 would authorize appropriations for BIA to construct emergency shelters, halfway houses, and juvenile detention facilities for tribal youth. According to BIA, construction costs for similar facilities on Indian lands average about $10 million per project. Based on information from BIA regarding the demand for such facilities in Indian country, CBO estimates that this provision would cost $227 million over the 2010–2014 period.

Section 202 would authorize appropriations for DOJ to make grants and provide other assistance to state, local, and tribal governments for cooperative programs to reduce crime in Indian country and nearby communities. Based on funding levels in recent years for similar cooperative programs, CBO estimates that this provision would cost $34 million over the 2010–2014 period.

There are several other provisions in the bill that authorize the necessary sums over the 2010–2014 period for certain BIA programs. CBO estimates that a program to train tribal law enforcement and judicial personnel to address matters related to substance abuse and illegal narcotics would cost about $5 million a year. In addition, we estimate that a program to combat the trafficking of illegal narcotics on Indian lands along the northern and southern borders would cost about $3 million a year. Finally, we estimate that several other programs aimed at reducing substance abuse and eliminating illegal narcotics in Indian country would cost a total of $4 million annually. In total, CBO estimates that implementing those provisions would cost $58 million over the five-year period.

Intergovernmental and private-sector impact: S. 797 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in UMRA and would impose no costs on state, local, or tribal governments. Tribal governments would benefit from the authorization of appropriations for law enforcement and criminal justice activities. Any costs to those governments would be incurred voluntarily as a condition of receiving federal assistance.

Estimate prepared by: Federal Costs: Mark Grabowicz and Jeff LaFave; Impact on state, local, and tribal governments: Melissa Merrell; Impact on the private sector: Marin Randall.

Estimate approved by: Theresa Gullo, Deputy Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

VIII. REGULATORY IMPACT STATEMENT

Paragraph 11(b) of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate requires each report accompanying a bill to evaluate the regulatory and paperwork impact that would be incurred in carrying out the bill.
