

What Physicians Need to Know About the House Democrats' Health "Reform" Bill

Independent Analysis Finds Government-Run Health Plan Leads to Drastic Reimbursement Cuts

House Democrats have proposed creating a government-run health plan to "compete" against plans in the private market. A June 2009 study by the Lewin Group, an independent research firm, predicts enrollment in the government-run plan would reach 123 million, including 114 million Americans who would be forced out of their current private health coverage.

Making matters worse, the Democrats' government-run plan would reimburse physicians at Medicare rates¹. The problem is that, on average, Medicare reimbursements are 20 percent below those paid by private plans. Given the vast erosion of private health coverage caused by a government-run plan, a greater share of physician revenues would be based on Medicare's chronic under-payments.

- The Lewin Group analysis of the House Democrats' health reform bill predicts that:
 - Physician net-income would decline by $11.5 billion per year. This is a result of 114 million Americans being forced out of higher reimbursing private plans and into a government-run plan that underpays physicians.
 - This equates to an average yearly pay cut per physician of more than $16,000.
 - If House Democrats' scrapped their big-government-at-any-cost agenda and removed the government-run plan from their bill, physician net-income would instead increase by $14.2 billion ($19,795 per physician) largely because of a reduction in uncompensated care.
- The House Democrats' bill would also create a physician's worst nightmare: a powerful, unelected government health board that would tell physicians how to practice medicine.
 - This board would have the power to decide which treatments patients could receive and at what cost. Additionally, Washington bureaucrats would have the authority to require that all physicians participate in the new government-run plan, forcing them to accept the government-run plan's insufficient reimbursements.
- Despite their claims, House Democrats do little to address the flawed Medicare reimbursement formula, other than changing its name.
 - By renaming the Sustainable Growth Rate (SGR) the "Targeted Growth Rate" House Democrats' argue they are reforming Medicare physician payments. But consider this – just like the SGR, the TGR would:
 - Allow physician payment rates to be slashed by 7 percent if predetermined government-set spending targets are exceeded;
 - Be tied to the Gross Domestic Product. So physicians would continue to be unfairly punished when the economy slows.
- Lastly, the House Democrats' bill does not address the need for medical liability reform, which is essential to reduce costly, unnecessary defensive medicine practiced by physicians trying to protect themselves from overzealous trial lawyers.
