PURPOSE AND SUMMARY

H.R. 3126, the Consumer Financial Protection Agency Act of 2009, was introduced on July 8, 2009, by Rep. Barney Frank. H.R. 3126 is intended to improve consumer protection in the financial arena by creating one commission whose sole mission is consumer financial protection. H.R. 3126 would pull the consumer protection functions from each of the banking agencies, and some consumer financial protection functions from the Federal Trade Commission (FTC), and give those functions to the new commission. The legislation calls for the Consumer Financial Protection Agency (CFPA) to ensure that:

1. consumers have, understand, and can use the information they need to make responsible decisions about consumer financial products or services;
2. consumers are protected from abuse, unfairness, deception, and discrimination;
3. markets for consumer financial products or services operate fairly and efficiently with ample room for sustainable growth and innovation; and
4. traditionally underserved consumers and communities have access to financial services.

H.R. 3126 would consolidate in this new commission all consumer protection functions related to financial products, including rulemaking, supervision and examination, and enforcement. CFPA would have its own authority to issue rules prohibiting unfair, deceptive, and abusive acts, and would become the sole rulemaking authority for consumer financial protection statutes, including the Truth in Lending Act, the Equal Credit Opportunity Act, and the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act.

In addition, H.R. 3126 would provide the FTC with additional authorities to conduct rulemaking and enforce against unfair or deceptive acts or practices.

BACKGROUND AND NEED FOR LEGISLATION

Consumer protection in the financial arena is governed by various agencies with different jurisdictions and regulatory approaches. This disparate regulatory system has been blamed in part for the lack of aggressive enforcement against abusive and predatory loan products that contributed to the financial crisis, such as subprime and nontraditional mortgages.

FTC has broad authority to protect consumers from unfair, deceptive, and unlawful practices with respect to credit and debt. The authority of the FTC is limited, however, to those functions conducted by non-depository institutions. Depository institutions are overseen by the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Office of Thrift Supervision, the Federal Reserve, the National Credit Union Administration, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

At a hearing before the House Committee on Financial Services held on June 24, 2009, Kathleen Keest of the Center for Responsible Lending testified that banking regulators have been hesitant to address abusive practices. She stated: “Because abusive practices often produce short term profit, these regulators have typically viewed consumer protections as nothing more than a restraint on bank activity and revenues.”<sup>1</sup>

FTC focuses on consumer protection, but it has a burdensome rulemaking process. At a hearing before the Subcommittee on Commerce, Trade, and Consumer Protection of the Committee on Energy and Commerce in March 2009, Chairman Jon Leibowitz testified that the FTC “could have done more” in the area of consumer credit, but that the FTC is “a tiny agency” that has been “hamstrung by the Magnusson-Moss rulemaking process” and lacks “fining authority.”<sup>2</sup>

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

The Consumer Financial Protection Agency Act of 2009, H.R. 3126, was introduced on July 8, 2009, by Rep. Barney Frank as the “Consumer Financial Protection Agency Act of 2009”. The bill was referred to the House Committee on Financial Services and the House Committee on Energy and Commerce. H.R. 3126 was subsequently referred to this Committee’s Subcommittee on Commerce, Trade, and Consumer Protection on July 8, 2009. The Subcommittee held a legislative hearing titled: “The Proposed Consumer Financial Protection Agency: Implications for Consumers and the FTC.” This hearing examined the proposal by the Obama Administration for the creation of a new consumer protection agency, a proposal that was introduced as H.R. 3126 on the same day.

The House Committee on Financial Services considered H.R. 3126 on October 22, 2009, and subsequently ordered reported the bill, amended, by a recorded vote of 39 yeas to 29 nays.

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION

The Committee on Energy and Commerce met in open markup session on October 29, 2009, to consider H.R. 3126. The Committee used for the underlying bill the language of H.R. 3126, as ordered reported by the Committee on Financial Services. The Committee considered amendments to the bill and subsequently ordered H.R. 3126 reported to the House, amended, by a recorded vote of 33 yeas to 19 nays. The bill was reported by the Committee as the “Consumer Financial Protection Commission Act of 2009”.

COMMITTEE VOTES

Clause 3(b) of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives requires the Committee to list the recorded votes on the motion to report legislation and amendments thereto. There were no recorded votes on amendments offered to H.R. 3126 during Committee consideration. The Committee agreed to a motion by Mr. Waxman to order H.R. 3126 favorably reported to the House, amended, by a recorded vote of 33 yeas and 19 nays. STATEMENT OF COMMITTEE OVERSIGHT FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

In compliance with clause 3(c)(1) of rule XIII and clause (2)(b)(1) of rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the oversight findings and recommendations of the Committee are reflected in the descriptive portions of this report.

NEW BUDGET AUTHORITY AND CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE ESTIMATE

With respect to the requirements of clause 3(c)(2) of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, and section 308(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 and with respect to requirements of clause 3(c)(3) of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives and section 402 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the Committee anticipates that a CBO cost estimate letter will address these issues when the bill proceeds to consideration on the House floor.

STATEMENT OF GENERAL PERFORMANCE GOALS AND OBJECTIVES

In accordance with clause 3(c)(4) of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the performance goals and objectives of the Committee are reflected in the descriptive portions of this report.

CONSTITUTIONAL AUTHORITY STATEMENT

Under clause 3(d)(1) of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee must include a statement citing the specific powers granted to Congress to enact the law proposed by H.R. 3126. Article I, section 8, clauses 3 and 18 of the Constitution of the United States grants the Congress the power to enact this law.

EARMARK AND TAX AND TARIFF BENEFITS

H.R. 3126 does not include any congressional earmarks, limited tax benefits, or limited tariff benefits as defined in clause 9 of rule XXI of the Rules of the House of Representatives.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE STATEMENT

The Committee finds that section 113 of H.R. 3126, as reported by the Committee on Financial Services, creates an advisory committee under the Federal Advisory Committee Act. The Committee on Energy and Commerce did not amend this section of the bill.

APPLICABILITY OF LAW TO THE LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

Section 102(b)(3) of Public Law 104-1 requires a description of the application of this bill to the legislative branch where the bill relates to terms and conditions of employment or access to public services and accommodations.

H.R. 3126 creates a new executive branch agency in order to improve consumer protection in the financial arena and does not relate to employment or access to public services and accommodations in the legislative branch.

FEDERAL MANDATES STATEMENT

Section 423 of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act (as amended by section 101(a)(2) of the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act, P.L. 104–4) requires a statement on whether the provisions of the report include unfunded mandates. The Committee anticipates that this issue will be addressed in a CBO cost estimate letter for the bill when it proceeds to consideration on the House floor.

COMMITTEE COST ESTIMATE

Clause 3(d) of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives requires an estimate and a comparison by the Committee of the costs that would be incurred in carrying out H.R. 3126. The Committee anticipates that a CBO cost estimate letter will address these issues when the bill proceeds to consideration on the House floor.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE LEGISLATION

The Committee on Energy and Commerce considered H.R. 3126 as ordered to be reported by the Committee on Financial Services, but only amended certain sections of the bill. This analysis will discuss only those sections that differ from the legislation as ordered to be reported by the Committee on Financial Services.

Section 1. Short title

Section 1 provides that the short title of H.R. 3126 is, “The Consumer Financial Protection Commission Act of 2009.”

Section 2. Table of contents

Section 2 provides the table of contents for the bill.

TITLE I—CONSUMER FINANCIAL PROTECTION COMMISSION

Section 1. Definitions

Section 1 of Title I defines the terms used in the legislation. It includes a definition of financial activity that serves as the basis for determining the jurisdiction of the Consumer Financial Products Commission (CFPC). The definition of “financial activity” specifically excludes the transmission, routing, or transient storage of information when that transmission serves purely as a conduit for information. In this situation, the entity transmitting the data is not the sender, is not the intended recipient, did not modify the data in any way, and does not treat the data being transmitted any differently from any other data sent over its pipes. That same entity, however, which serves as a mere conduit may also engage in a “financial activity” as defined by the bill.

Section 111. Establishment of the Consumer Financial Protection Commission

Section 111 establishes CFPC as an independent commission with principal offices in Washington, DC.

Section 112. Composition of the Commission

Subsection 112(a) establishes a five member commission with membership appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Subsection 112(b) establishes that no more than three members of the Commission may be members of the same political party. Subsection 112(c) calls for the President to appoint a Chairman from among the sitting commissioners. The Chairman is given executive authority to appoint and supervise personnel employed by the Commission and to determine the use and expenditure of funds, but must be governed by general policies of the Commission. Subsection 112(d) establishes five year terms for commissioners, and allows the President to remove commissioners only for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. Members of the Commission may serve for up to a year following the expiration of their term while awaiting the appointment and confirmation of a replacement. Initial appointments would be staggered. No commissioners would be permitted to hold outside employment. Subsection 112(e) establishes a quorum of three members for the conduct of business, unless there are only three members serving on the Commission. In that case, two members would constitute a quorum. Subsection 112(f) dictates that the Commission shall have a seal. And subsection 122(g) establishes compensation rates for commissioners and the chairman.

Section 115. Administration

Section 115 provides the Chairman with the authority to appoint staff and officials of the Commission, and establishes several functional units of the Commission, including research, consumer financial education, and consumer complaints. This section makes clear that, in collecting and tracking consumer complaints, the Commission may create its own database or utilize an existing database. The section also calls on the Commission to share data as appropriate with federal banking agencies, FTC, other federal agencies, and state regulators.

Section 117. Consumer Advisory Board

Section 117 calls for the Commission to coordinate with other federal agencies and state regulators, including FTC.

Section 118. Reports to the Congress

Section 118 requires the Commission to submit reports to the appropriate committees of Congress. It further directs the Commission to appear before the appropriate committees of Congress upon request.

Section 118A. GAO small business studies

Section 118A calls on the Government Accountability Office (GAO) to examine the effects of the Commission's regulations on small businesses.

Section 120. Amendments relating to other administrative provision

Section 120 adds CFPC to the list of financial regulatory agencies that may communicate with Congress independently of the President. It further adds CFPC to the definition of "independent regulatory agency" under the Paperwork Reduction Act.

Section 122. Authorities

Section 122 provides certain authorities to CFPC. For cases in which there is overlap in enforcement authority with FTC, subsection 122(e) establishes a specific procedure for the agencies to consult and coordinate. Paragraph (2) calls on FTC to notify CFPC before it files an enforcement action under one of the laws for which FTC and CFPC share jurisdiction. If FTC files such an enforcement action, CFPC may intervene in the case. If, however, CFPC has already initiated a case against a particular entity for a particular action violating any of the laws for which the two commission share jurisdiction, FTC may not file its own case against the same entity for that same action violating the same law. Subparagraph (D) makes these restrictions and obligations reciprocal. This paragraph ensures that, when CFPC and FTC are investigating the same violations and considering enforcement actions against the same entities, they coordinate and do not file separate, but nearly identical, actions.

Section 161. Transfer of Certain Functions

Section 161 transfers the consumer protection functions of several agencies to CFPC. With regard to FTC, paragraph (a)(5) transfers the consumer financial protection functions that are contained within the enumerated statutes. The paragraph makes clear that this transfer would not lead to an automatic transfer of staff from FTC to CFPC. The Committee finds that, under this Act, FTC would retain much of its responsibility for consumer financial protection and would continue to need staff to conduct these functions.

TITLE II—IMPROVEMENTS TO THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT

Section 201. Amendments to the Federal Trade Commission Act

Section 201(a) of Title II of the bill enables the FTC to seek civil penalties in enforcement actions against violations of the FTC Act, not just violations of rules and orders, as the FTC Act currently allows.

Section 201(b) enables the FTC to enforce against those who knowingly or recklessly provide substantial assistance to entities that violate the FTC Act or any other laws enforceable by FTC relating to unfair or deceptive acts or practices. The paragraph further clarifies that this section is not intended to alter current federal law that addresses the roles and responsibilities of Internet companies for content and conduct of third parties. Most notably, the Communications Decency Act provides immunity to certain entities for content prepared by third parties. This encourages the development of new online services and creates incentives for Internet companies to act responsibly and remove unlawful conduct when it is discovered—without the fear of liability. This is not a wholesale exemption for Internet companies. Rather, it is recognition that the long-standing legal framework set forth in the Communications Decency Act is not changed by this bill.

Section 201(c) enables the FTC to promulgate rules relating to unfair or deceptive acts or practices using the procedures required by the Administrative Procedures Act (5 U.S.C. section 553). These procedures would replace the burdensome Magnusson-Moss procedures.

Section 201(d) strengthens the authority of the FTC to litigate its own cases when it seeks civil penalties against fraudulent actors. Under current law, if the FTC wants to seek civil penalties in an enforcement action, it must first refer the case to the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ). DOJ has 45 days to decide whether it will bring the case on the FTC's behalf. The FTC can only litigate the case if, at the end of 45 days, DOJ decides not to take action. This subsection would give the FTC the authority to bring these civil penalty actions without delay.

EXPLANATION OF AMENDMENTS

The following amendments were adopted by the Committee on Energy and Commerce:

Chairman Waxman and Ranking Member Barton manager's amendment, which passed by a voice vote, makes several changes to the bill. The manager's amendment restructures the governance of the new agency, changing it from an agency headed by a single director to a commission headed by five commissioners. The amendment additionally changes the name of the new agency to the Consumer Financial Protection Commission. The manager's amendment also revises the definition of "financial activity" in section 101 to clarify that the term does not apply to transmission of data to the extent that the entity transmitting the data serves only as a conduit for the information and does not select or modify the information, and does not differentiate it from other types of data that the entity transmits. In addition, the amendment revises section 123(e) to provide FTC and CFPC with reciprocal notice and coordination obligations when enforcing laws that both commissions have the authority to enforce. Both commissions would be required to provide notice to the other prior to filing such a case whenever feasible, both would be authorized to join the other's case, and neither could bring a case against an entity for an action violating a law if the other commission has brought the same case against that entity for that same action violating the same law. In addition, the amendment makes several changes to ensure CFPC consults and coordinates with FTC in the development of a system for collecting consumer complaints, and ensures that CFPC may use FTC's existing database rather than create a new database of complaints. The amendment calls on the Commissioners of CFPC to appear before the appropriate committees of Congress s requested to discuss the efforts, activities, objectives, and plans of CFPC, whereas the bill reported out of Financial Services had the agency head only testify before the Financial Services Committee. The amendment further adds language requiring CFPC to coordinate with FTC along with other federal and state regulators, and to consult with FTC on developing report requirements for non-depository institutions. Furthermore, the manager's amendment added language regarding FTC's ability to enforce against those that give substantial assistance to others who commit unfair or deceptive acts to ensure that that new authority not supersede the Communications Decency Act. Finally, it makes clear that the transfer of authorities language does not trigger the automatic transfer of staff in 5 U.S.C. section 3503, and makes technical changes to this section and other sections to comport with the changes to the "transfer of functions" language that were made in the Committee on Financial Services.

Chairman Waxman's amendment, accepted by a division vote of 19-17, adds a new subsection 210(d) that provides FTC with the authority to seek civil penalties in enforcement actions without first referring those actions to the Department of Justice.

Rep. Scalise offered an amendment, which passed by a voice vote, adding a new section 118A that calls on the Government Accountability Office to examine the effects of CFPC regulation on small businesses.

CHANGES IN EXISTING LAW MADE BY THE BILL, AS REPORTED

In the opinion of the Committee, in order to expedite the business of the House of Representatives, it is necessary to dispense with the requirement of clause 3(e) of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives (relating to showing changes in existing law made by the bill as reported).

DISSENTING VIEWS

We, the undersigned Members of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, submit the following comments on H.R. 3126 to express our concerns with the amending language that creates the Consumer Financial Protection Agency and modifies the responsibilities of the Federal Trade Commission.

Since the global financial crisis that began in the spring of 2007 and peaked in the fall of 2008 with the collapse of Lehman Brothers and AIG, the government takeover of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, and numerous bank failures, many proposals have been put forward to avert another future market crisis.

In addition to these new proposals to address systemic risk, others have sought to address unrelated practices or industries in the name of reform. Any ills that contributed to the financial crisis have become the Obama Administration's raison d'être for creating a new super consumer protection regulatory agency, the Consumer Financial Protection Agency (CFPA).

Rather than address the failure of banking regulations related to consumer protection and the failure of the States to police activities under their purview (e.g., mortgage brokers and real estate agents), the proposed legislation to create the CFPA seeks to consolidate the consumer protection jurisdiction of all banking regulators into one new agency and regulate many new activities and persons that largely are unrelated to the financial markets or the crisis of 2008.

A new regulatory body with authority this sweeping in nature cannot be evaluated properly unless its proponents first define clearly what problems they are seeking to address. The major problems in the financial markets and home foreclosures trumpeted so far would focus the legislation on the following financial products: mortgages and credit cards. Yet the Congress passed sweeping changes to address credit card abuses at the beginning of this Congress and new regulations for mortgages and the securities markets are forthcoming.

While changes in regulation of mortgages and securities markets are warranted, it is a far different matter to propose a regulator with authority over nearly every sector of the economy to improve consumer protection. Simply put, the evidence is lacking to support the need for a new super regulator for all consumer financial activities.

Examining the reasons behind the housing bubble and subsequent collapse, Congress must admit its own mistakes, including policies that have contributed to the housing bubble and subsequent implosion. Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac had long been criticized for their failure to adhere to the same standards and practices the private sector had to follow. With the implicit guarantee of the Federal government, which became an explicit guarantee once they were placed in receivership, Fannie Mae and Freddie

Mac were able to fund themselves at lower costs than their competitors and gain substantial market share. In essence, they were chosen by the government to be a winner and responded as one might expect, by wielding their political influence to avoid the further regulation that was called for by many Republicans. Yet they did not have to follow the same securities regulatory requirements their competitors did. Not surprisingly, they needed more scrutiny when they were found to have misstated and manipulated their earnings. It is now ironic that many Democrats did not call for more regulatory scrutiny over Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac as problems emerged—problems that are now costing taxpayers tens of billions of dollars—but wanted instead to continue to expand the policy of Federal government intervention into the housing market through additional incentives and taxpayer-supported subsidies to homebuyers.

Easy credit and lack of savings combined to create an environment where many mortgage products designed to be “affordable” emerged that could quickly be sold off to Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac. And with Congress and previous Administrations encouraging Fannie and Freddie to be more flexible with their standards and purchase more mortgages of riskier quality, taxpayers were put on the hook for more and more liabilities of these failed institutions. Rather than addressing this agency problem, the Democrat Majority’s policy response seems to be to keep Fannie and Freddie subsidized by the taxpayers, continuing to buy mortgages from originators regardless of their quality. Some have blamed the financial crisis on the presumed private-sector perspective of “privatizing the gains, and socializing the risk,” but none fit this model more than Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. Unfortunately, taxpayers will be paying for the losses for years to come and potentially paying for an impending bailout of the Federal Housing Administration. None of these problems will be solved by the proposals put forward.

TITLE I, CONSUMER FINANCIAL PROTECTION AGENCY

We support the goal of protecting consumers against fraud and deceptive practices but disagree wholeheartedly with the creation of a Consumer Financial Protection Agency. While we feel that the change from a single Director to a bipartisan Commission (the Consumer Financial Protection Commission (CFPC)) improves the legislation, we understand the Majority will have an amendment made in order for Floor consideration that will return the Director for an interim period of two years, after which the Director will become the Chairperson of the five member Commission. This is unacceptable and a disappointing change for anyone concerned with enacting a credible structure of governance. The creation of the Commission will benefit governance, hold the Agency more accountable, and ensure a more deliberative process in its decision-making, especially given the nearly limitless authority given to the Commission to determine what will be considered consumer financial activities and subject to the Commission’s authority.

However, we do not need another “czar” empowered to control the economy with little or no accountability.

While the current jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) is preserved in the drafted legislation, we remain concerned that the structure of dual jurisdiction and dual enforcement will be problematic and burdensome for regulated entities. It is questionable whether a brand new agency with new staff who have no experience regulating the entities currently under FTC jurisdiction can do a better job than the FTC. It is our belief the CFPC will not and therefore should not be given dual jurisdiction.

Of the many other objectionable provisions, the scope of CFPC authority is particularly troubling. A super regulator that will be in charge of nearly every sector of the economy, including entities that have otherwise never engaged in the sale of a financial product or service but will now find themselves under multiple jurisdictions, is a recipe for disaster, is unwarranted, and is an overreach of an overactive government.

Under the legislation, the Commission will have jurisdiction over any person it deems, by rule, to be a covered person. The definitions for “financial activity” and “financial product or service” are so broad and permissive that a financial activity can be defined in any manner the Commission deems appropriate. Of particular concern is the open-ended nature of section 101(19)(P), which permits the definition to be expanded to any activity the Commission finds will have or is likely to have a material adverse impact on the creditworthiness or financial well being of consumers. Under this open-ended authority and a simple common-sense reading of the language, there is no doubt that activities such as marriage, divorce, having a child, or even the purchase of a big screen TV could be determined to be a financial activity. Additionally, the definition permits the Commission to determine any other activity that is incidental or complementary to any other financial activity to be a financial activity. Either of these authorities will permit unlimited authority.

Notwithstanding the specific exemptions for particular industries or professions enumerated in the legislation, it appears the exemptions only apply if the Commission chooses to observe Congressional intent regarding the exemptions provided. If on the other hand the Commission decides to determine those activities or persons covered, there appears no impediment to stop the Commission from making such a determination. This authority undermines every exclusion provided in the bill for non-financial activities if the Director or Commission can simply re-define the excluded activities back within the CFPC’s jurisdiction under this catch-all provision.

We are equally concerned about the approach to regulation. Currently, the broad range of statutes and regulations the CFPC can enforce only creates a floor for financial consumer regulations. If the goal is to create an effective new Federal regulator, it only makes sense to ensure their authority is not undermined. As a candidate, President Obama said that “we need to streamline a framework of overlapping and competing regulatory agencies.” As the bill is currently written, it does just the opposite, allowing and encouraging the growth of up to 50 different State regulatory fiefdoms, in addition to dual Federal regulation. This directly contradicts the President’s statements. If the States will be authorized to enforce the Federal laws (as they are in this proposal), we do not see the value in permitting them to write State laws that go beyond the Federal law unless the goal is to increase regulatory costs and create confusion and inconsistencies. That will only ensure that compliance costs increase as more lawyers are hired, resulting in lower job growth in the rest of the economy. Already, regulatory burdens impose mounting costs on the Nation's businesses, both small and large. According to the Small Business Administration, businesses with less than 20 employees spend more than $7,600 a year per employee in order to comply with Federal regulations. Businesses with over 500 employees spend almost $5,300 per employee in regulatory compliance. This bill will only raise those costs.

Similarly, the approach to enforcement is of great concern. H.R. 3126 gives unprecedented new financial regulatory authority to a single agency. The CFPC's broad regulatory jurisdiction would affect nearly every area of the economy, and the new agency would have independent litigating authority to bring actions for violations. Centralizing so much authority and control in one Federal agency is cause enough for concern, but granting 51 Attorneys General enforcement powers over this exceptionally broad jurisdiction is cause for serious alarm. Covered entities will be subject to the enforcement discretion of the FTC, the CFPC, and potentially 51 Attorneys General who can all seek civil penalties. We believe this will not result in greater consumer protection, but rather will increase litigation-averse behavior by businesses that may ultimately harm and confuse consumers.

Finally, we object to the inclusion of a new undefined and subjective standard for violations. The term "abusive" expands the known standards of "unfair or deceptive" and the Commission is left to its own devices in determining its meaning. Therefore, any covered person will face great uncertainty as to how the Commission will interpret and enforce this standard as he or she tries to operate a business. By including such an undefined and elastic standard, the potential for unlimited regulation and enforcement goes up substantially.

Closely related to this standard, the CFPC is given "unfairness" rulemaking authority which is inconsistent with and clearly goes far beyond the similar authority provided to the FTC under current law. The FTC's authority was tied to section 5(n) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (FTC Act), and the FTC has no authority to declare an act or practice unlawful on the grounds that it is unfair unless: "the act or practice causes or is likely to cause substantial injury to consumers which is not reasonably avoidable by consumers themselves and not outweighed by countervailing benefits to consumers or to competition. In determining whether an act or practice is unfair, the FTC may consider established public policies as evidence to be considered with all other evidence. Such public policy considerations may not serve as a primary basis for such determination." The ability to utilize this highly elastic concept without the restrictions of section 5(n) of the FTC Act will compound the problems associated with the inherent vagueness and elusiveness of the definition of "unfairness."

TITLE II, FTC IMPROVEMENTS

Under section 201, the FTC is given authority to conduct across-the-board rulemakings under the expedited Administrative Procedures Act (APA), rather than under the present Magnuson-Moss rulemaking procedures. Congress instituted the Magnuson-Moss rulemaking procedures in the 1970s due to its growing concern that the FTC, which at the time was carrying out multiple wide-ranging concurrent rulemakings, should be required to carry out more structured rulemaking procedures. In light of the Commission's extremely broad powers over vast segments of the nation's economy, Congress, at that time, believed that expedited rulemaking authority (180 days) could lead to a serious "rush to judgment", allowing the FTC to make major, industry-wide regulatory changes without adequate time for industry input and thoughtful consideration.

History repeats itself and provides an instructive lesson as to why the Magnuson-Moss requirements were enacted by a Democrat-majority Congress three decades ago. At that time Congress recognized the FTC had jurisdiction over all commercial activities that were not specifically excluded. This broad jurisdiction was given to the FTC knowing it could not be expected to be an expert for every industry. Keeping current with industry developments for every sector of the economy is an unrealistic expectation.

Current rulemaking proposals indicate the FTC may be headed off track again. FTC has noticed a proposed rule regarding debt relief services under APA rulemaking procedures using its alleged authority under the Telemarketing Abuse and Prevention Act. While we withhold our position on the merits of the proposed rule, the process used to issue it raises concerns. The industry is segmented between for-profit and non-profit businesses. Yet the proposed rule can only reach those entities under the FTC's jurisdiction—meaning it will not apply to non-profits and will affect only 20 percent of the industry that operates for profit. The proposed rule takes the extreme position of banning the advance fee compensation model of the for-profit entities. Given that over 85 percent of the debt relief industry is occupied by non-profits—which the FTC has no information on and no jurisdiction over—it is not clear on what basis it is proposing the rule. Additionally, it is not clear whether the FTC in this rulemaking has weighed the competitive effects or whether changes will help consumers if it drives out the for-profit providers and creates a monopoly for the non-profits. At the very least, this is not a complete record. Congress should ensure that the rules the FTC promulgates are based upon a complete record of all the facts and information.

In fact, there has been no showing that the Magnuson-Moss requirements have hindered the FTC from carrying out a rulemaking it wished to pursue.

It is true that Congress has given the Commission APA rulemaking authority under specific statutes, such as the Children's Online Privacy Protection Act, the Telemarketing and Consumer Fraud and Abuse Prevention Act, and others. However, those delegations came only after extensive hearings and an opportunity for industry input. That has not happened in this case. Also, those Acts include well-defined and specific standards for the Commission to enforce. In fact, the expansion of APA rulemaking authority in H.R. 3126 applies to the entire scope of the broad, general powers of the FTC to regulate false, deceptive or unfair acts or practices over virtually every segment of commerce.

Mr. Timothy Muris, who served as Chairman of the FTC from 2001 to 2004, testified at a July 14, 2009, hearing of the U.S. Senate Commerce Committee Subcommittee on Consumer Protection, Product Safety, and Insurance to strongly urge the Congress to retain the Magnuson-Moss rulemaking procedures at the FTC. Muris stated:

“The administration’s proposal would do more than just change the procedures used in rulemaking. It also would eliminate the requirement that unfair or deceptive practices must be prevalent, and eliminate the requirement for the Commission’s Statement of Basis and Purpose to address the economic effect of the rule. It also changes the standard for judicial review, eliminating the court’s ability to strike down rules that are not supported by substantial evidence in the rulemaking record taken as a whole. The current restrictions on Commissioners’ meetings with outside parties and the prohibition on ex parte communications with Commissioners also are eliminated. These sensible and important protections should be retained.”

The FTC is not an agency that has specific subject matter expertise over a particular area of the economy, such as the SEC, the CFTA, or the EPA. Therefore, it is more important for the agency to follow the detailed and focused procedures of Magnuson-Moss rulemaking procedures when carrying out an industry-wide rulemaking.

There are a number of procedural safeguards in Magnuson-Moss that are important and should be preserved. These safeguards include the following requirements: (a) the Commission must identify a pattern of activity—a prevalence, as opposed to one instance—before engaging in a rulemaking; (b) a rule may be overturned by the courts if it is not supported by substantial evidence taken as a whole; and, (c) the Commission provide a statement as to the economic effect of the rulemaking. All of these protections are presently being abrogated by H.R. 3126. They are all sensible requirements and there is no reason to believe that these rules will hinder the FTC in forceful rulemaking.

We do not find the argument that all other Executive Branch agencies may promulgate rules pursuant to APA particularly relevant. No other agency has the breadth of jurisdiction of the FTC, and therefore, comparing these many different agencies’ authorities and procedures is inappropriate and misleading.

We believe the example of the speed with which the Consumer Product Safety Improvement Act of 2008 (CPSIA) and the resulting unforeseen consequences on the law is illustrative of the potential problem with this grant of fast-track rulemaking. While that legislation was founded upon the best of intentions—and while it was limited to what we then considered a relatively limited portion of industry (the world of children’s products)—we have observed the unforeseen impact on thousands of businesses. Unfortunately, many of these unintended consequences could have been avoided had the affected industries had an opportunity to submit comments. No one was excluded from that legislative process; however, because CPSIA moved from legislation to law in under one year, there was not sufficient time for downstream manufacturers and retailers to become aware of CPSIA’s proposals and thus weigh in.

We do not believe it is a stretch of the imagination to extrapolate the example of CPSIA by a multiple factor. The FTC's rules on commerce reach from Wall Street to Main Street, with the former dedicating full-time staff to monitoring and commenting upon Congressional action while the latter has no such resources.

Further, we note this Committee's history of granting the FTC APA rulemaking for particular issues. That ad hoc approach ensures the appropriate amount of Congressional oversight for an Executive Branch body with the breadth and reach as the FTC. This history also illustrates that the Commission's argument for more responsive rulemaking authority is not without at least some merit in certain contexts. As an alternative to fast track rulemaking power, however, we proposed an alternative that blended both rulemaking approaches. It would permit the quicker, more flexible rulemaking approach of the APA but mandate certain extra procedures to make such a process more deliberative. We remain strong supporters of this approach versus general APA rulemaking authority, particularly if general civil penalty authority is provided to the FTC. We also believe this model should be extended to the new CFPC given its similar expansive authority.

Finally, as mentioned above, we do not believe the FTC requires both general civil penalty authority and general rulemaking authority. The Commission's primary justification for requesting APA rulemaking is so that it may be more responsive to fraudulent or unfair or deceptive activities in the marketplace. With a faster rulemaking process, there is no justification for empowering the FTC to impose civil penalties on someone who has no notice that his or her conduct is illegal. If the activity of concern is of such magnitude as to harm consumers on a wide scale, the FTC may simply issue a cease and desist order while undertaking a rulemaking under APA. In granting the FTC civil penalty authority, there is no need for fast track rulemaking. We vociferously oppose granting the FTC both of these powers.

The Civil Penalties section 201(a) dramatically changes the regulatory powers of the FTC by providing a sweeping scope of authority the Commission has never had since its inception in 1914. Under current law, the FTC may only seek civil penalties where the party in question is on notice that his or her conduct is unlawful, unfair, or deceptive. A party is considered on notice where there is an existing rule clearly defining conduct that is permitted, or, alternatively, where the Commission issued a formal cease and desist order in instances where no law or regulation exists to clearly define permissible and impermissible conduct.

H.R. 3126 grants the FTC general civil penalty authority under its section 5 unfair or deceptive acts or practices standard. Under current law, the standard remedy for an initial violation of the FTC Act is a cease and desist order. The FTC can pursue monetary penalties only for violations of FTC rules or cease and desist orders.

Under the authority provided in H.R. 3126, the FTC can now seek monetary penalties for unfair or deceptive acts or practices even if the party in question is not on notice that his or her conduct is unlawful because there is not a specific rule addressing the act in question. Unfortunately, the concept of unfair or deceptive acts or practices is similar to Justice Potter Stewart's famous "I know it when I see it" standard. This means individuals, small businesses, and other companies will be subject to what is essentially a strict liability standard for undefined conduct. In our view, where strict liability is warranted, that conduct should be as well-defined as in other areas of the law where strict liability is mandated. With the current civil penalty authority at $16,000 per violation, with each day considered a new violation, honest companies and small businesses that have no idea that the FTC considers their conduct unfair will be subject to potentially crippling fines reaching into the thousands—and perhaps millions—of dollars.

Finally, perhaps most significantly, and as aforementioned, it is our view that if Congress grants the FTC general rulemaking authority under the APA, general civil penalty authority is unnecessary. If the argument for APA rulemaking authority is for quicker, more responsive rulemaking ability, the Commission will have the ability to put parties on notice of unlawful conduct by promulgating rules in just months in most cases. Combining these two new authorities is a dangerous proposition that flies in the face of any notion of fairness and could result in exactly what the Commission seeks to redress—unfair practices, but unfair practices undertaken by the Commission. In granting the FTC general civil penalty authority—and thereby the ability to seek civil penalties in the absence of placing “bad” actors on notice of their unfair or deceptive conduct—we essentially dispense with the need for rulemaking authority altogether.

The Aiding and Abetting section 201(b) creates a new aiding and abetting violation within section 5 of the FTC Act. The language lowers the standard for aiding and abetting beneath the existing standard for other violations of section 5: it will be unlawful to knowingly or recklessly provide substantial assistance. The law currently requires the FTC to establish independent culpability of third parties under section 5. This change would import criminal law concepts into a civil statute.
