Review of old data finds memo from Col. Luttrell dtd 3 May 85 noting TT New Well ran for 7 hours each on 4-22, 4-23, and 4-29. To clarify running and operational (from an operators point-of-view) the well was run sparingly for three days to maintain reservoir capacity but was never operational. My bust on never running.

Gentlemen,

Small modification to the comments below. It appears that TT 23 was in fact put back on line during 22-29 April 1985 during a period of extreme water shortage. TT 23 was showing 25-40 ppb PCE in monitoring during the February, 1985 timeframe. However, finished water at the TT Plant from 22-29 April, 1985 came out below the detection limit of 10ppb. TT-25 was also used after March 1985, but PCE contamination was never confirmed in this well. Rather, the state suspected TT-25 would be the next well contaminated, and consequently Camp Lejeune conducted monthly monitoring on the well to insure contamination did not occur.

Fred,

I talked with Jeremy and clarified a couple of points. The statement in the first paragraph of Contamination and Clean-up was reinforced to say all known contaminated drinking water wells had been located and shut down by February 1985.

Jeremy asked me to clarify a couple of questions. One, that well TT-23 was never used and this was true. Two, that TT-25 well was secured in 1987, but it was not used or in service after 9 February 1985 when all TT wells were disconnect and water was then supplied from the Holcomb Blvd plant and associated wells not from the TT Housing area.

I have not gotten a copy of Carl's comments yet, but will keep trying although probably not before noon. I left a call-back at Jeremy's phone in case he wants more information. If there is any more I can help with, please call.

Fred,

I've made a few comments. I think the paper is confusing about TT wells and Hadnot Point wells. After 1985, we continued to sample wells and when ANY contamination was found the wells were secured.

Steve Soller is getting a copy of this, and he and Mack should be able to answer any additional questions then.

V/R,

Carl
