The Daily Quote

"[President Obama unveiled] what his administration is calling 'a new Patient's Bill of Rights' — a set of regulations governing how the industry implements some of the most consumer-friendly provisions of the health care bill. The rules, which take effect Sept. 23, prevent insurers from refusing to cover children with pre-existing conditions; impose strict limits on insurers' ability to cap coverage during any given year; end lifetime coverage caps; and end the practice known as rescission, in which companies, citing minor paperwork mistakes, cancel coverage for people who get sick. Under the new regulations, companies will be prohibited from rescinding coverage except in cases involving fraud or intentional misrepresentation of facts."
