Gangster Squad Hits the Brakes After Shooting

IN THE WAKE of the July 20 shooting at a Dark Knight Rises screening in Aurora, Colo., there was much speculation about how the tragedy would affect the blockbuster. But the event ended up having an unexpected impact on an entirely different film: the action drama Gangster Squad. In an echo of the massacre, the movie's trailer included a scene showing mobsters opening fire on a crowded theater as they burst through the screen. Warner Bros.

pulled the trailer and will replace the scene, requiring reshoots that have pushed the planned Sept. 7 release back to Jan. 11. Speaking to EW prior to the Aurora shooting, Ryan Gosling—who costars with Josh Brolin and Sean Penn in the story of the rise and fall of notorious 1940s Los Angeles Mob kingpin Mickey Cohen—expressed praise for director Ruben Fleischer (Zombieland). "This was a huge project. Ruben was spinning a lot of plates, but he had a master plan." That plan will now require some additional tweaking. —JOSH ROTTENBERG

Weinstein Calls for Forum on Violence in Film

→ The man behind Reservoir Dogs and the upcoming Django Unchained might not seem like the most obvious crusader against onscreen violence, but producer Harvey Weinstein is calling for the industry to reconsider its often brutal content. "I admit that we've been involved in some of the most violent movies," Weinstein tells EW, adding that after the Aurora, Colo., shooting, he thought, "What am I contributing to this society, and should we look at what we do in media?" In the coming weeks, Weinstein hopes to organize a forum of filmmakers to discuss violence in film. "Questions will be raised, and I don't know if there will ever be an answer," he says. "But I'm going to put my money where my mouth is." —Dave Karger

Eric Andre
