THE WALL STREET JOURNAL.

Dear Friend,

I trust average Americans to know what to expect when listening to a sales pitch: not entirely objective advice, but some accurate and in many cases very helpful advice nonetheless included. Butchers do not double as paid nutritionists, but they can still preach about the nutritional benefits of red meat without confusing or bilking customers.

But a proposed rule from the Department of Labor could actually hurt Americans planning for retirement and restrict their choices when listening to their trusted investment advisors.
