Genocide, Crimes Against Humanity, and War Crimes Jurisdiction

By the Staff of the Global Legal Research Center

This chart reports on 149 jurisdictions that have laws punishing at least one of the three crimes, genocide, crimes against humanity, or war crimes. It indicates, where information was available, whether those laws cover only nationals, foreign persons when the offense is committed within the territory, or foreign persons when the offenses are committed outside of the country’s borders. In cases for which it is known that the laws have actually been applied, that information is included in the far right column of the chart. Note that blank boxes indicate that information was not available on a particular point. Note also that in some cases “yes” or “no” is indicated in the columns as the general rule, but limited exceptions are made, as indicated in the endnotes.

<sup>23</sup> The PRC Criminal Law provides for universal jurisdiction over crimes which are stipulated in international treaties concluded or acceded to by China, and to which China agrees to exercise criminal jurisdiction within the scope of its treaty obligations. Nevertheless, China has rarely made any special criminal provisions defining the international crimes of genocide, crimes against humanity, or war crimes, and therefore prosecution of such crimes may have to be made for ordinary crimes wherever available.

<sup>24</sup> There are only two Chinese criminal law provisions, one on servicemen “cruelly injuring innocent residents in an area of military operation or plundering their money or property” during wartime and the other on maltreatment of war prisoners, that may be deemed to be war crimes under the international criminal law.

<sup>93</sup> Crimes committed abroad by Swiss nationals will only be prosecuted according to art. 7, ¶ 1 of the Criminal Code if the offense is also liable to prosecution at the place of commission (reciprocity), (b) the person concerned is in Switzerland or is extradited to Switzerland due to the offense; and (c) under Swiss law extradition is permitted for the offense, but the person concerned is not being extradited. Crimes committed abroad by foreigners will only be prosecuted according to ¶ 1 if (a) the request for extradition was refused for a reason unrelated to the nature of the offense; or (b) the offender has committed a particularly serious felony that is proscribed by the international community.

<sup>94</sup> In 2001, the Swiss Military Court of Appeal upheld a fourteen-year sentence for a former Rwandan mayor, Fulgence Niyonteze, who was sent to prison in Geneva for his part in the 1994 Rwandan genocide. He was convicted on charges of murder, incitement to murder, and war crimes. Militärkassationsgericht [Military Court of Appeals], Apr. 27, 2001, Entscheidungen des Militärkassationsgerichtes aus den Jahren 1997–2005, Band 12 [Decisions of the Military Court of Appeals from 1997–2005, Vol. 12], No. 21, p. 92, https://eu.alma.exlibrisgroup.com/view/delivery/41BIG\_INST/12329504630001791, archived at <http://perma.cc/8SEL-3Q2M>.

<sup>95</sup> The Regulation on the Crime of Genocide states its provisions apply “regardless of the status of the offender.” It is debatable, however, whether this means the court may exercise universal jurisdiction over the crime of genocide. If it does not mean universal jurisdiction, the ordinary Criminal Code provisions on criminal jurisdiction apply, according to which foreigners who have committed crimes abroad may be prosecuted if the victim was Taiwanese.
