

Bruno Fulda is Counselor for Ecology, Sustainable Development, Transportation and energy at the French embassy in Washington, responsible for the United of America and Canada.

A French civil servant with financial, legal and technical background, Mr. Fulda has had responsibilities in the fields of public affairs as well as the private sector.

Advisor to French transport Ministers, then chief economist and planner of an airline, he has also been in charge of the economics of the French airlines industry within the French government.

He has been an auditor at the French Government Accountability Office and in various UN and European organizations.

In his recent duties, Mr. Fulda was Deputy Assistant Secretary for International Affairs of the French Ministry of Ecology, Energy, Transport, Sustainable Development and the Sea and then, as chief of staff to its General Secretary, headed the team that started a new international regional organization, the Union for the Mediterranean in Barcelona, oriented towards projects in Ecology, Transport, Energy, Business development, Education and Social affairs in the Mediterranean area.

In March 2015, in preparation for COP 21, Bruno produced and hosted the Forum of Communities for Urban Sustainability, or FOCUS 2015, at the French Embassy. The two-day forum brought together 60 US and French mayors and 300 key decision makers to exchange ideas and information for making cities more sustainable.

In June 2015, Mr Fulda co-published in Paris a book with 20 French top economists including Nobel Prize winner Jean Tirole and ex-Prime minister Michel Rocard, about climate and capitalism. His contribution focuses on the new US paradigm on Climate.

He had previously published articles about Air quality and global sustainability policies.

Mr. Fulda has been mainly posted in France, China, Italy and Spain.
